Vol. 103, No. 1 April 4, 1931

For the Whole People

A PRINCIPAL factor in what's wrong with the motion picture business at this time is an unfortunate choice of story material.

Much of the product which recently has issued from the Hollywood studios is plainly and uncompromisingly adult entertainment. We are quite aware that it is not the business of Hollywood to confine itself to juvenile entertainment, nor to gauge its product to appeal exclusively to 12-year-old intellects.

Rather, it is the business of Hollywood to make product for the motion picture theatres. And that it certainly is not doing when it puts out a succession of pictures such as "Millie," "Strangers May Kiss," "Illicit," "Stolen Heaven" and "A Lady Refuses." Artistically and in a plain entertainment sense there is much to be desired in various of these subjects but they are not popular entertainment. They may be well liked by certain groups in certain places but they are distinctly foreign to the type of entertainment which made the motion picture the world's greatest agency of public amusement.

These subjects presumably were made for the motion picture market, yet no sensible person would contend that they are fit, proper or logical for the motion picture market when this market is viewed—as it really is—as a combination of all ages, kinds and classes of people.

Hollywood, in its creative leanings, is now too much inclined to produce what it likes to produce rather than what it ought to produce. We do not say that it was not the intention—and hope—of the producer of each one of these pictures to turn out an entertainment of world-wide appeal and popularity. But had he looked calmly and collectedly at the essential nature of the material which he had undertaken to handle he could not have helped reaching the conclusion that it was intended for the classes and not for the masses.

The business needs more mass type entertainment and less class type entertainment. The latter may be giving Hollywood producers, writers, directors and actors a pleasant sensation in feeling that they have become subtle, sophisticated and mature but it is giving a lot of box-offices an acute pain. —MARTIN QUIGLEY

Who Taught Jesse James?

"CRIME flourishes when youths can go to movies and there learn the best methods for picking a lock, using a blackjack, looting a home or blowing a safe," says Lemuel B. Schofield, director of public safety in Philadelphia, according to an Associated Press dispatch. Every one familiar with history will realize that there was no crime of importance in the world prior to the opening of the first nickelodeon in 1905. Jesse James, Cole Younger, Henry Starr and Tracy-the-Outlaw are thus inexplicable. Also strangely enough the Five Points Gang and the Hudson Dusters dated back to the 80's. With no movies to blame such phenomena are hard to understand.

Advertising on the Screen

WHAT with the current activity of a newly formed committee on screen advertising of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the die is now cast and the motion picture theatre is committed to trial by ordeal.

The queston of whether or not the theatrical screen is to be a medium of merchandising propaganda, and made at one with the radio and the publications of the printed word, will be decided in that big hard school of experience.

It is perhaps well enough that it should come to this eventuation now. The great experiment has been inevitable ever since that first day that the merchandisers found that the motion picture had acquired a voice with which selling talks could be made. The precedent of the radio has been importantly provocative, both within and without the motion picture institution.

Plainly enough the motion picture theatre will welcome and adopt any component of its program which will importantly add to its revenues and earning power, or even sustain them. Regardless of the opinions and forecasts for and against the theatrical advertising, or sponsored picture, the answer is now going to be had from the audiences themselves in terms of box office votes. After all, that is where the motion picture has learned most of its lessons thus far.

Entirely without prejudice to this great experiment which is to be undertaken, it may be observed in passing that many years have now passed since the legitimate stage, from the metropolis to the hinterland stock houses, learned that it was unprofitable to use the syndicated advertising curtain. And it may be observed that in the world of printed pages the reader has his option, wherein he may read or ignore the pleas of advertisers. Also the selling voice on the air can be tuned out with a slight flick of the wrist. But the spectator in the motion picture theatre has no choice but to look at the screen. In the dim lighted house he is not even given the relief of observing the pretty girl three rows ahead on the aisle.

This means that if the theatre screen is to present pictures with a merchandising motif they shall have to be at least as entertaining as the average of program material. That, one is sure any motion picture maker will admit, constitutes a considerable order. It has been found quite difficult enough to make screen material of adequate box office acceptance with only the problem of entertainment in sight. Now if pictures must be made not only entertaining but also laden with selling pressure and merchandising lure the problem will be found to be increased by at least the square and maybe by the cube. The requirement will be to be somewhat louder and a tremendous deal funnier.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

A CAMPAIGN has been underway for some time which has as its object to stop Howard Hughes from making "Queer People." A story which deals—and not kindly—with various members of the film colony.

It is these certain individuals who are under the impression they are grossly insulted in the book, that are doing all they can to prevent its being made. For weeks they have been printing stories, spreading rumors and doing other such things, in an effort to get the young producer to abandon the making of a picture based upon the story. It is perhaps this desire of some who feel they may be "exposed" in such a picture, to halt its making, that causes Hughes to go ahead with his plans.

The stories circulated have dealt with various subjects. Some are to the effect that the Hays organization will bar the picture. Others are that the director gave the story up as hopeless, others that no players will condescend to play the parts of their fellow townsmen, and so on.

Regardless of what others think, say or do, Hughes plans to make the picture and what effect it has on the cinema city is a matter to be determined later.

1500% Tilt Is Price of Success

Independent producers making a "special" which they believed would click heavily because of the name value and talent of their star, started looking for a second vehicle for her. They selected one play in particular and contacted the agent.

"$4,000," he replied.

The first picture was previewed and released. It was a "hot shot" and gave every indication that it would go over in a big way.

"We think we'll take that story at $4,000," the independents told the agent.

"Like fun you will," said the agent, who had seen the first picture. "The price is now $60,000."

The independents laughed and walked out on him.

But the agent laughed last.

He sold the yarn to a large producing company for another elderly actress who is also bringing the customers into the box office for—$60,000.

His Dreams Tumble

A few years ago a man who had accumulated considerable wealth in operating small theatres decided to get into the big city, downtown districts. Much against the advice of others he built a theatre in the downtown section on property that cost a terrific sum. His theatre seated less than 1,000 and as he was an independent he was forced to get product later or inferior to that of his competitors.

When talking pictures came along he was one of the first to install equipment, due largely to the fact his main source of product was a concern that made it imperative to show its pictures in the new fashion. As a result his business for about one year was nothing less than sensational and his profits were around the million mark.

It was then that he dreamed of building a theatre that architecturally would have no equal. Obtaining another downtown site at great expense he built this house and made it most lavish in all details. Comforts that his patrons could get in no other house were put in at great expense. A restaurant even was built in the theatre to accommodate them.

The opening came. It was historic. The town had seen nothing quite like it and the picture was a success. The producing company, knowing it had an ace up its sleeve, made the exhibitor play on a percentage basis that robbed him of anything but a meager profit. This, however, was overlooked as the picture would help identify the house as one of the first class showplaces in the city. After several weeks the big picture began to slip and new product was sought. In an effort again to get a big picture the operator offered a major studio a princely sum for one of its new pictures which had all the earmarks of being a smash at the box office. The studio was eager to sell the picture on the plan offered but a big theatre circuit which bought a large amount of the studio's product stepped in and said no. If the deal went through, the circuit would not play that studio's pictures in its several hundred theatres. So the deal was dropped and the independent operator had to take what he could get—second-class first runs or second run pictures.

After a number of weeks of the inferior product, business in the big house fell way off. The operator who had such big ideas found that it was pictures and not the theatre that his patrons wished to see. The "drop-in" trade he expected is not coming, when for the same 65 cents they can see a picture that is perhaps better and with a big stage thrown in, just a half block down the street.

What the manager is going to do is the big question. Will he start heavy advertising? Will he cut the price to 25 cents or thereabouts? Will he put in big stageshows, or will he sell out to a circuit that can get the product needed for the house? All are matters for conjecture and many are the eyes turned to the spot which for the next few months faces—success or failure. Which will it be?

A BIG theatre operator was robbed. For two days the papers carried stories in big headlines telling of the holdup. A large fortune had been taken by the thief and at the risk of several lives.

Questioned regarding the affair, the b.t.o. replied.

"It was an interesting experience. All that it cost was the loss of $150 in cash; the rest of the property was insured."

So everyone but the insurance company is happy. The latter has to make good to the extent of about $20,000.

Hitting Far Below the Belt

Some slick "executive" salesman for one of the larger producer-distributors deliberately resurrected unethical trade tricks of the "shoestring" days when he caused to be circulated propaganda and rumors which stated that Mack Sennett was "pulling away" from Educational to become associated with the short subject division of his company.

The salesman's company has had considerable tough luck in the sale of shorts, and with the new sales season closely approaching, it appears obvious that the outfit sought to alleviate the stigma attached to its short releases and present to exhibitors a more favorable picture of the new short group by using the name of Sennett.

No thought, apparently, was given to the ill effect it might cause to Educational.

Incidentally, the current crop of rumors is the second planted by the distributor in an identical situation.

"Scarlet" Fever Is Unhealthy

The rising tide of newsreel competition is resulting in all the devious tactics which have in the past characterized newspaper wars. One newsreel organization under the fevered pressures of a new management and policy has raided a competing staff in the execution of long laid plans. Measures of retaliation more intricate and orientally complex than the simple gesture of a counter raid are in operation.

Meanwhile, selling pressures and competition for screen time are increasing to a point where over-exploitation of the field, in the opinion of some observers, is likely to result in some very scarlet figures. The union scale for newsreel cameramen, and in effect all of the reels are unionized, is yet to be settled upon, and editorial salaries in the subordinate positions of newsfilm production are likely, through competition, to come in for readjustments.

THE INSIDERS

WALL ST. BECOMES A PICTURE CRITIC WITH AN EAGLE-EYE ON BOX OFFICE

Financial Lords Turn Severely Critical and Place Onus for Certain Unfavorable Earnings Statements as Much on Inferior Quality of Films as Other Causes

By THE ANALYST

Although the motion picture business came through the depression of 1930 in comparatively better shape than most other industries, a survey of earnings of leading film companies for that year and a checkup on estimates for the immediate future reveals that Wall Street more than ever is watching the quality of output as one of the main factors in determining future income of motion picture companies.

Moreover, a roundup of financial opinion shows that the street is proving to be a severe critic and in most instances places the onus for some recent unfavorable earnings estimates as much on inferior pictures as on other factors such as declines in theatre attendance, increases in capitalization, higher costs, etc.

The consensus is that the favorable earnings records shown by leading companies in 1930 were made largely in the early part of that year when the novelty of the talking screen had not yet worn off and that if favorable comparisons with 1930 are to be made now the producers will have to toe the line in offering a consistently better product to the public.

Theatre Attendance Better

Current estimates on individual companies are divided, but most of them are on the downside. In fact, only one major unit, RKO, is expected to show as much for the first quarter this year as for the corresponding period of 1930. The "Street" is dubious or noncommital about the results to be shown by the other companies for the period, while the balance of the year, according to present opinion, will depend largely on the quality of pictures, as attendance is expected to show up better with improvement in general business.

Already one of the statistical services notes that picture attendance, which has been running about 10 to 15 per cent below a year ago, shows signs of betterment and, again touching the quality angle, this service goes on to say that "the low level of purchasing power had its effect on motion picture box office receipts during a period when the quality of pictures was below normal, but with increasing optimism in general business, the public is apparently again turning to the movies for entertainment."

Turning to individual companies, RKO is conceded in financial circles to be in a favorable earnings position just now. The company more than doubled its net in 1930, reporting for the year net income of $3,385,628, or $1.45 a share, against $1,669,564, or 92 cents a share in 1929, and its acquisition of Pathe and interest in "Radio City" are expected to be reflected by improved earnings.

Paramount, which for 1930 reported a record net of $18,370,000, compared with $15.544,544 for 1929, is in some quarters not expected to show for the first quarter

Building a Strong Wall Around the Heavy Axe

When a certain well-known second-string organization decided many weeks ago to cut down overhead by firing 40 of its field sales staff, an unusual piece of strategy was launched to prevent adverse criticism, to bolster morale of the remaining personnel and to halt the inevitable discussion of "bad times."

Here's how it was done:

Advertisements were widely circulated in the trade press appealing for scores of "good salesmen." The "rub," of course, appears within the quotes.

Ironically enough, the same advertisement also asked exhibitors to "join us in this fight against unemployment."

"BUY NOW! Keep these men happily employed," theatre owners were told.

And all, accompanied by grand and glorious gestures, while the axe was swinging right and left to trim the payroll $4,000 weekly.

Fox Tells Mgrs. To Have Spunk, Cease Worrying

Old man fear, apparently, has been sewing the seed of discontent in the minds of certain Fox circuit managers and others who were recently promoted. The house chiefs are said to have felt they are being "put on the spot" by promotion.

The home office heard about the yarns and the following order is the result:

"We think it's about time that some of the men who work for the organization be told a thing or two about what is known as 'guts.'

"The old gag about not knowning whether your job is good until you have read your morning mail doesn't apply to Fox Theatres Corporation. It seems strange, after so many demonstrations of the humane attitude of our new management, that this should have to be explained to anybody on the payroll.

"Still, it must be explained.

"Suspicious of Advancements"

"Lately there have been an extraordinary number of promotions and it has been our observation that not a few of the men who have been promoted were suspicious that their advancements were due to improper motives. Some suspected that they had not made good with the men whose departments or divisions they were leaving. Others have felt that in going to new jobs they were being 'put on the spot.' Still others indicated timidity about leaving familiar surroundings and going to new ones.

"We can understand from what the motion picture business has been why such suspicions have existed in this and other organizations in the past, but we can't account for them in our organization as it is conducted today. We believe that there have been sufficient demonstrations of the kindliness with which this organization has been run. We believe that it has been sufficiently demonstrated that we require manpower—man-power which must be developed from our ranks. Therefore, we cannot understand the lack of mettle that some of the men who have been promoted seem to show."

Plenty of Action Slated for Annual Meeting of Pathe

Loud squawks by stockholders voicing disapproval of Pathe's sale to RKO are expected at the annual meeting of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on April 28, when the combined forces of minority holders may take further steps to push court action asking damages which the minority group claim it suffered as a result of the sale.

There now is pending a $20,000,000 suit, filed by Lena Vincent, and a petition to all stockholders may gain added backers to her cause.

Will J. J. Franklin Sell Out to Brother?

Los Angeles—Recent decision of J. J. Franklin to quit the Hughes-Franklin circuit and launch a theatre unit of his own has set insiders wondering over the possibility of an "understanding" between "J. J." and his brother, Harold, whereby the former would acquire a bulk of theatre properties on his own and then sell out to the H-F interests, with which he has been connected since its inception last year.

THE CODE or CENSORSHIP

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

ABOUT a year ago all of the leading motion picture producing companies entered into a definite plan which was intended to attain and maintain a proper moral character in screen entertainment. This plan is commonly referred to as "The Production Code."

At the time the Code was adopted considerable misunderstanding existed in various quarters in the trade as to the Code and the reasons for it. Unfortunately, much of this misunderstanding still exists.

The plain fact is that unless the industry maintains some appropriate scheme of self-discipline with respect to the moral character of pictures there is certain to be imposed upon it from the outside some form of pre-publication censorship. Such a censorship would necessarily be political and would also, necessarily, share in the fortunes that inevitably attends such a matter as this when it is thrown in the political arena.

In addition to the fact that political censorship would be a very bad thing for the motion picture business, it would also be a very bad thing for the motion picture, because with an army of political manipulators operating upon motion pictures after they have left the studios, the results upon the screen would be deplorable. Further, no one can—and no one should be permitted to attempt—to shoulder the producers' responsibility for the product turned out.

The only proper and the only effective means of safeguarding the character of the screen is some plan of self-regulation in the studios. This, essentially, is the reason for the Production Code and the reason why it was adopted and entered into as a working agreement by all of the leading producers.

Together with the misunderstanding that has existed with reference to the reasons for a Production Code, there has been some very unenlightened criticism of the Code itself. A considerable part of this criticism may immediately be put aside for the simple reason that the critics, as plainly indicated by the nature of the criticisms, have not taken the trouble to read the Code and consequently have only vague illusions and no real knowledge of what its provisions and directions are.

There are others who have acquainted themselves with the Code and hold, in the several cases, a variety of opinions. Some insist that the Code is too strict; others insist that it is not strict enough. Still others claim that the code iself is all right but that it is something that was not intended to be taken seriously—that it was only meant to be a pious gesture of compromise entered into to appease the demands of the church people.

As far as the merits of the Code itself are concerned it seems quite sufficient that it was accepted in good faith as a working agreement by the men actually responsible for something in the neighborhood of ninety-eight percent of the pictures produced in the United States, accepted as a plan which meant no unnecessary sacrifice of anything that may legitimately be considered a proper dramatic value in motion pictures.

If the Code is acceptable to the men who know how to make motion pictures, just how it may be regarded by others who only think that they might be able to make pictures is not very important, especially if these amateurs set up objections which are not regarded as valid objections by the men who actually make the pictures.

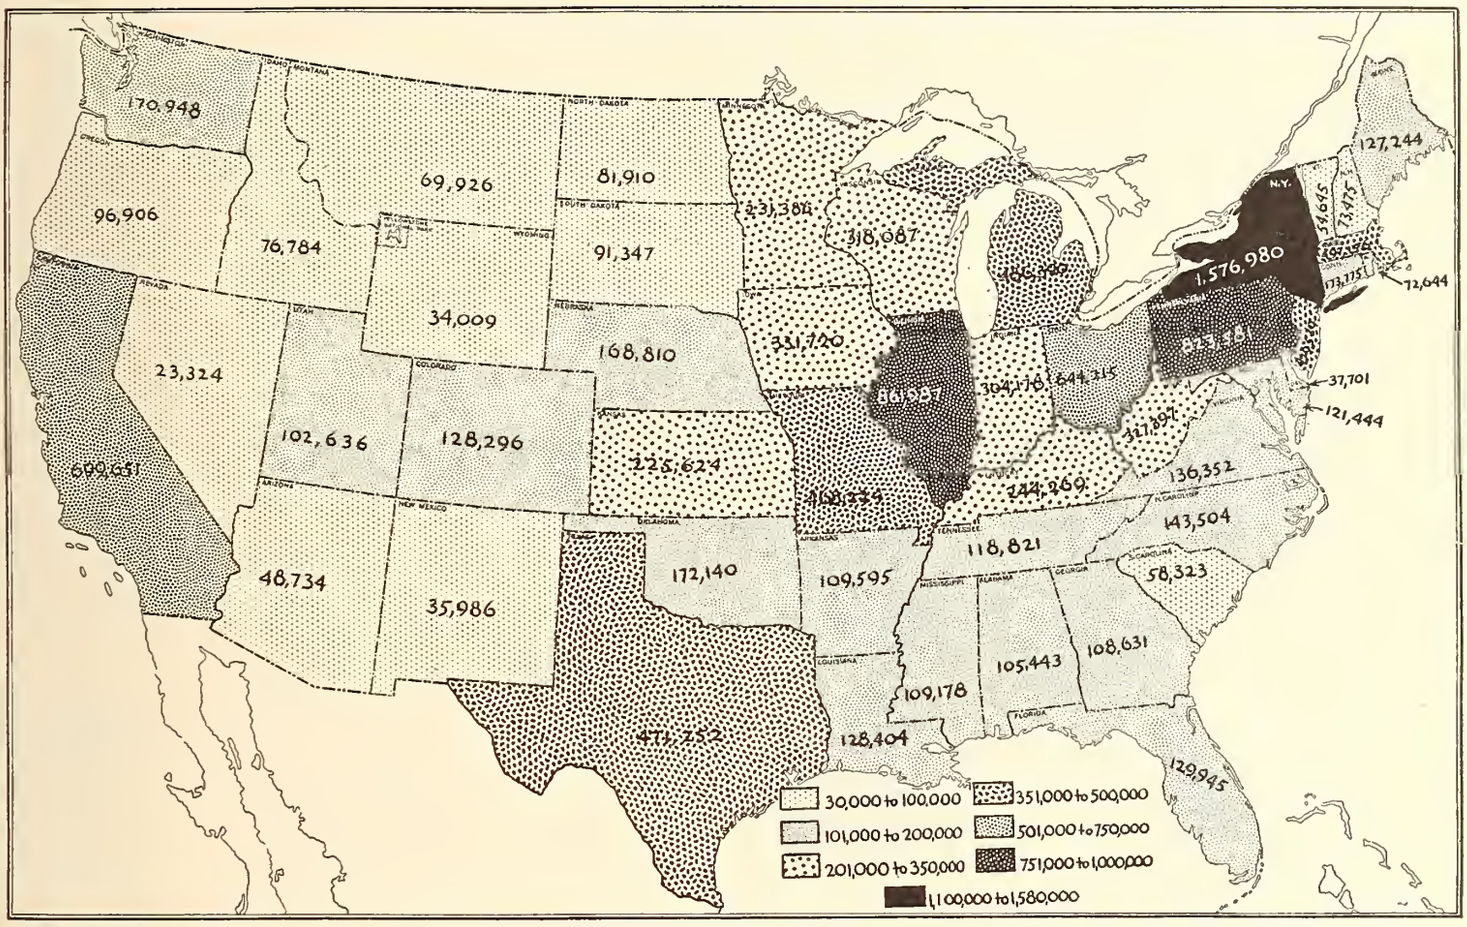
An examination of the record leaves no doubt that the Code, at its adoption, was taken seriously and is still being taken seriously. The record very definitly proves that, during its first year, it has been enormously effective.

Whether pictures during the past year have been more clean or less clean does not alone prove either the effectiveness or lack of effectiveness of the Code. The Code has been, and if properly supported will continue to be, the most effective means yet proposed to regulate the moral character of screen entertainment. Neither the Code nor any other arrangement can offer a positive corrective influence upon such a complex problem as motion picture entertainment. The ultimate result is bound to be influenced by various factors, including the spirit of the day and the moral values or lack of moral values which pervade the principal sources of story material which are popular novels and stage plays. But day by day the Code has exerted its influence upon production and its accomplishments to date have been both numerous and important.

The greatest handicap the Code now labors under is the fact that only a small percentage of the vast personnel of the industry has yet become sufficiently familiar with it. With the traditional self-complacency of Hollywood, thousands there who are vitally concerned in production, because they have heard of it in a vague, indefinite way, think they know all they need to know and should know about it.

In the distribution branch of the industry we have yet to note a single instance in which any serious effort has been made to acquaint exchangemen with the Code, what it is and the reasons for it. Yet distributors in the field are daily confronted with situations in which their best interests and the best interests of the industry at large require from them an explanation of the Code.

Theatremen who have considered the Production Code a matter of interest and concern only to the production branch of the industry are distinctly in error. Theatremen are affected by every vital matter in motion picture affairs and this is one of the most vital. Here lies the theatreman's interest:



Insurance of a right and generally acceptable moral character in pictures is several times more necessary than fire insurance on your building. A building may be re-built much easier than it would be to regain the good will of a public which had come to regard a theatre as a moral pest-house. The Code is the most effective means yet proposed to safguard the public's good will toward pictures.

Political censorship is expensive, troublesome, ineffective and dangerous. The Code is both a proper and an effective defense against censorship.

The co-operation and support of churchmen, educators, parents and other community leaders is a valuable asset to every theatre. The Code, intelligently explained, is an unparalleled means of winning and holding this co-operation and support.

NOTE: MOTION PICTURE HERALD, upon request, will supply to subscribers copies of the complete text of the Production Code.

WHERE ALL THE SEATS ARE IN THE U. S.

New York State, as indicated by the outline map above, has more theatre seats than any other state in the country, its 1,833 houses boasting of 1,576,980. This figure, however, is below average from standpoint of population. The average for the entire country is 10 persons per seat, while New York has only 1 seat per 8 inhabitants.

The map indicates the number of seats per state. On page 32 appears another chart in which is listed the capacity by states, together with the number of theatres and population of each state.

Eight Million Sales Quota Set by Chaplin on "Lights"

A worldwide sales quota of $8,000,000 is understood to have been set on "City Lights" by Charles Chaplin.

Although "Charlie" spent nearly three years in making the silent film, his production cost is believed by insiders to have been comparatively low. Chaplin, it is pointed out, always keeps his budget within an unusually limited figure.

Average Is Ten Persons Per Seat; South Underseated, With Other Sections Near Normal

Total seating capacity of the 21,284 sound and silent theatrical accounts listed on the books of distributors now reaches 12,142,761, representing one seat for every ten persons in the United States.

The average seating capacity of all accounts is 571, although averages for first and second runs reaches well over 1,500 seats.

South Carolina is the most underseated state in the country, having but one seat for every 29 persons. Alabama is a close runner-up with 25 people for every theatre seat, while North Carolina is third, having a seat for every 22 inhabitants. Other southern states follow closely in this category, indicating the South to be the most underseated geographical division of the U. S.

Other sections of the country run more or

Screen's Fight on Censor Should Be Widened: Darrow

Clarence Darrow, lawyer, speaker and belligerent liberal, addressed the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Hotel Dixie in New York Thursday, with an argument that the screen in fighting censorships should also make the whole cause of individual liberty its cause.

The announcement of the address by Darrow excited anticipations and curiosity resulting in a heavy attendance at the meeting and a full coverage by reporters from the metropolitan press, with a sprinkling of motion picture executives of the upper ranks.

However, Darrow adhered rather closely to the tenor and terms of his widely heard and oft repeated proclamations in behalf of the institution of liberty. In the course of his remarks he said:

"I believe that a person who is fighting for his own liberty ought to fight for everyone else's liberty at the same time. I know everybody has a temptation to compromise and say: 'If you will give us this much, we will give you that much.' Now, that is entirely inconsistent with the ideals of freedom.

"A little wholesome propaganda thrown on the screen now and then, broad and intelligent, may do a great deal in promoting not only your cause by everybody else's cause. You cannot be free alone. When you fight for yourself, you have got to fight for the rest, and everybody understands the principle in this world that life is not worthwhile except by a large degree of individual freedom, and you will always find a considerable number of people who are milling and hacking away at it and forbidding this thing and that thing, and if the people who believe in freedom for themselves will stand together there is not much danger for the other fellow; it is just by dividing them and separating them and letting each one fight his own game that they get these laws in this country."

"Was His Face Red?"

Chicago (QP)—Ashton Stevens writes in his "Herald-Examiner" column of Helen Hayes' surprise upon returning to her hotel from the theatre where she is appearing and being advised by the desk clerk that a man giving his name as Charles MacArthur, and representing himself as her husband, had demanded the key to her room an hour before her arrival.

"Where is he now?" Miss Hayes asked.

"In bed."

"Well," replied Mrs. MacArthur, "don't ring back you'll know he's husband."

Ain't It the Truth?

"What is the basic reason for double featuring?" queried a newcomer in the picture field.

"'Strengthening' a weak attraction with another 'flop'," was the reply.

"Which," according to the novice, "makes the show just twice as bad!"

Marcus, Rogers To Meet Prior To Convention

Lee Marcus, RKO Pathe president, leaves next week for the Coast for final conferences with Charles R. Rogers, production chief, prior to the national sales convention in Chicago, April 20-22.

Lee Marcus

By next week, "Born to Love" with Constance Bennett and "The Registered Woman," with Helen Twelvetrees, will be ready. "Rebound," starring Ina Claire, will be set for cutting, and "Whoop-Te-Do Kid," with Eddie Quillan in production. The complete schedule calls for 21 features.

Pathe will release 22 short subjects during April, including four two-reel comedies, two Vagabond Adventures, two Sportlights, two Aesop Fables, eight issues of Pathe News and four of Pathe Disc News.

Affairs of Mice and Makers "Gang Aglee"

Los Angeles (QP)—Walt Disney Productions, Ltd., makers of Mickey Mouse animated cartoons, have filed suit in federal court here against the Van Beuren Corporation and Pathe Exchange, Inc., seeking an injunction, accounting of damages and surrender of profits on the contention that the mouse characters in "Aesop's Fables" are an invasion of Mickey's rights.

In New York, Amedee J. Van Beuren, president, issued a statement in which he said: "Our only information thus far is from articles in the daily press. Such an action is entirely without foundation, or merit. 'Aesop's Fables' created the characters Milton and Mary Mouse at the inception of the company in 1921 and the company has been using these characters ever since. If there has been any imitation practiced it should be laid at the door of Disney Productions, Ltd., who virtually copied our characters and changed the names to Mickey and Minnie Mouse. When we are served with papers we shall be prepared to defend the action."

No Changes in M-G-M Directorate

At M-G-M's annual meeting on Thursday, present board of directors was returned to office. The meeting was quiet, with routine affairs predominating.

Universal Will Make Own Reel Starting June 1

June 1, Universal will begin production of its "Newspaper Newsreel" with its own staff, following termination of the Kinograms contract, which was dissolved this week. A 60-day cancellation clause was invoked to authorize the split. This follows dropping of the Educational contract about seven weeks ago. The Universal-Kinograms contract, a five-year arrangement, had two years to run.

Captain G. McL. Baynes, Kinograms chief, commenting on the split, said, "Because of our new arrangement to produce sponsored talking newsreels for Allied States, we mutually felt that cancellation of our contract was advisable. Our association with Universal," he continued, "has been pleasant. Kinograms stands ready at any time to cooperate with Universal on the newsreel whenever needed."

Sam Jacobson, who edited the newsreel under the Kinograms arrangement, will assemble Universal camera staffs, with a great expansion of news sources planned.

Zukor Denies Kent Leaving To Join Fox Organization

Hollywood (QP)—Before departing for the East, following a survey of production activities, Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, denied that the company had any active interest in the Fox refinancing or that Sidney R. Kent, vice president and general manager, would leave the company to join Fox in a high executive capacity.

Zukor, who sees a year ahead of "slow but steady improvement," stated that Paramount's only interest in Fox, or any other major company, was that all should prosper so that it might be beneficial to the industry as a whole.

Lightman Getting 3 from Publix

M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who arrived in New York this week unheralded, is closing, it is understood, for three Publix houses in Helena and Pine Bluff, Ark.

Hughes and His Millions

Whether Howard Hughes will recoup the entire $4,000,000 fortune which he is supposed to have spent on "Hell's Angels" still is the cause of considerable speculation within inner film circles.

Although some believe a large share of the enormous sum spent on the air picture never will find its way back to Hughes' coffers, many contend that, on the basis of the unusually healthy percentages now being turned over to Hughes on circuit playdates, the multi-millionaire stands more than a fair chance of regaining production costs.

TIFFANY-EDUCATIONAL HURDLE THE OBSTACLES WHICH BLOCKED A DEAL

TWO THOUGHTS ON ONE IDEA

ON Tuesday, March 31, in his annual report to the directors of the Motion Picture Producers' and Distributors' Association of America, Inc., Will H. Hays, president, said:

"The handwriting now plainly on the wall is that America is largely through with the post-war preoccupation with morbidity and crime in literature and drama. The orgy of self-revelation which marked such a large portion of modern authorship is passing. We have a new, younger generation, now rising from the jazz age, that promises to support clean, high-purposed entertainment."

On the same day Samuel Goldwyn, in an interview with Florabel Muir which was published in the New York Daily News, declared as follows:

"A year ago the movie producers told their people, 'This season we'll catch them with torch titles.' They gave them instructions to go the limit with instructions that suggested parlor, bedroom and bath. . . . They thought they were getting sex fed to 'em raw, and it was really all sticky and gummy with sugar-coating.

"So this year," Florabel Muir quotes Mr. Goldwyn as saying, "the watchword is, 'go the limit and let the censors catch the hindermost'."

HERE are two startlingly contrasting expressions submitted for public consumption by two prominent personalities in the motion picture industry.

There may be some question as to whether Mr. Hays is entirely correct in his viewpoint, although there are increasingly numerous indications that the trend to which he refers is actually developing. How far it will progress, of course, remains a matter for the future to determine.

We approach consideration of Mr. Goldwyn's contrary statement very reluctantly. That it is plainly and obviously false is something that every well-informed person in the industry knows. It is shocking that Mr. Goldwyn should entertain such a viewpoint and it is several times more shocking that he should permit himself to give expression to it, even though he believed it to be true.

Mr. Goldwyn may enjoy his mention in the newspapers but when it is obtained at such great cost as this—to himself and to the industry—it would seem that he might well ask himself if it is worth the price.

Hollywood (QP)—The technicians' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences has now unanimously endorsed the new supersensitive type of panchromatic negative film recently introduced by both the major manufacturers, and now in use by six of the larger producing concerns here.

The use of the new film is spreading through the industry rapidly.

At this week's meeting of the technicians, Keith Weeks, executive manager of Movietone City, interposed effective opposition to any discussion of the relative merits of the Long Expected Merger Is About to Materialize

E. W. Hammons and L. A. Young Are Readying Formal Announcement Of Tiffany's Sellout

Breaking many records for prolonged negotiations, the long expected absorption of Tiffany by Educational inteersts has become a fact. Yesterday, formal announcement of the deal was being prepared by L. A. Young, Tiffany president, Grant L. Cook, his operating chief, and E. W. Hammons, Educational president, the latter representing the buyers.

Although a merger of physical distributing properties is one of the prime objectives of the combine, comparatively few of the sales personnel of either organization will be affected. It is planned to abandon one set of exchanges, which is expected to result in a saving of at least $2,000,000 yearly. The majority of both sales forces will be needed to dispose of shorts, as distributed by Educational, and the new lineup of features to be marketed under the Tiffany banner.

One of the more unknown factors of the deal revolves around the berth to be occupied by Cook, who, insiders say, will be seen with the merged unit for a while. Whether or not he will eventually retire from pictures, to again take up the duties whic hhe previously occupied in connection with general financing and the wire making company of Young, is a matter for speculation. It was Young who brought Cook into the picture field at the time of Young's purchase of Tiffany.

Hammons and Cook depart within a few days for Hollywood to look over the studio situation.

Differences between Hammons and Young are supposed to have held up completion of the Educational-Tiffany merger. Young, who spent at least $7,000,000 to develop Tiffany, sought to regain at least part of his investment through a deal with Educational. Hammons fought against this, it is understood, agreeing to take over the company and return a substantial sum to Young —if and when Tiffany made money.

Bankers, however, are understood to have been responsible for a tieup in the deal.

Educational is understood to have sought several millions to finance the merger. But, say insiders, bankers who are well acquainted with the operation of the film industry, did not agree on the placement of heavy money on a merged unit which insisted upon three sources of production (Tiffany studio, Educational-Metropolitan studio and the plant used by Sennett and Educational coproducer.)

CENSOR SITUATION IN ENGLAND HANGING FIRE AFTER 1930 REPORT

Board Now Acting Has No Statutory Power

Only 12 Films Are Totally Rejected During Year; Industry Pays Levy

By W. H. MOORING

London (QP)—The annual report of the British Board of Film Censors, just issued for the period to last December, presents the protagonists of a national censorship with splendid ammunition.

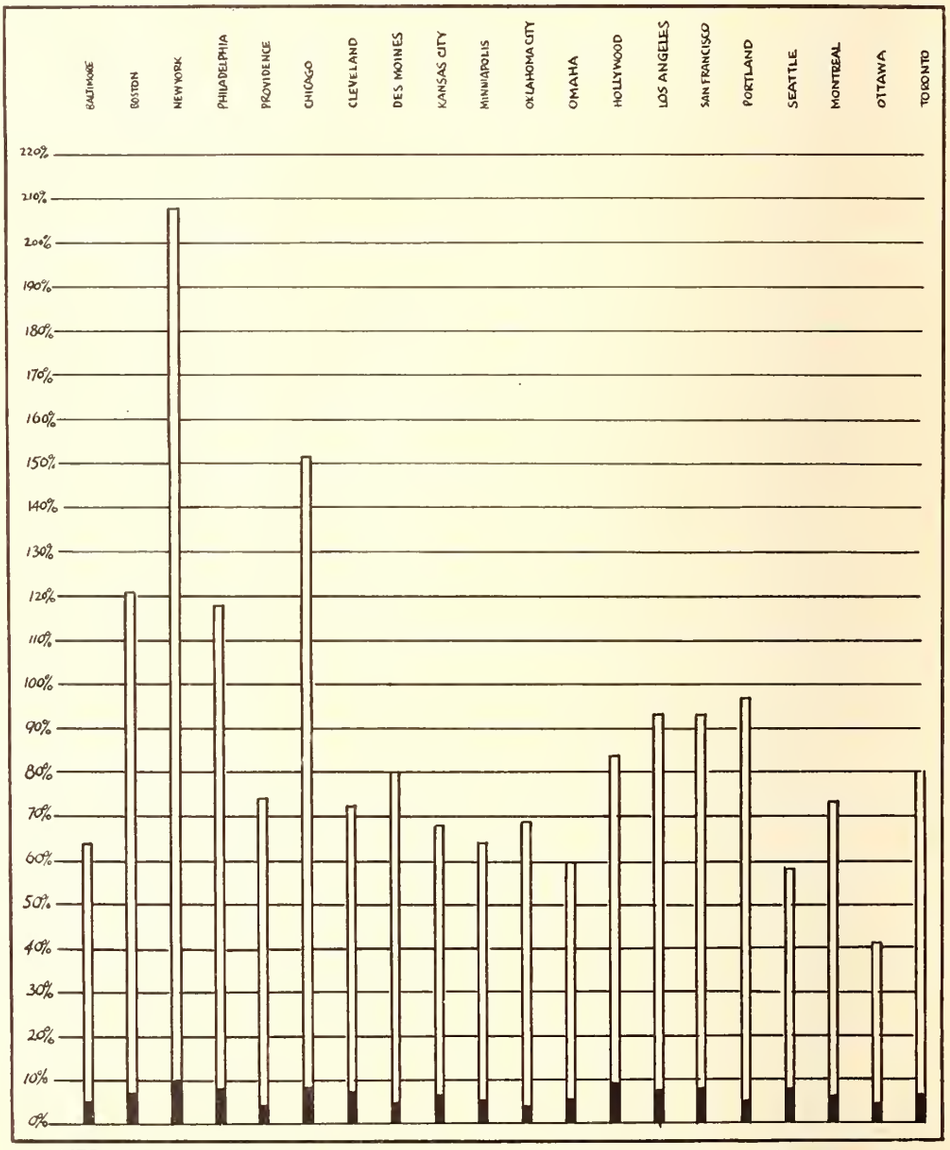
At the present time the censorship board has no statutory powers: It is upheld by the film industry itself, contribution being made by way of levy per reel of film submitted for examination.

The president of the board is the Rt. Hon. Edward Shortt K.C., ex-liberal politician, who succeeded the late T. P. O'Connor, also politician.

The precepts set by the late T. P. have been followed closely by his successor, and there has therefore been no change of outlook at the censors headquarters coinciding with the natural change in public opinion produced by the passing of time.

The present system, being non-statutory by nature, is not supreme. Its decisions can be, and often are, over-ridden by local licensing authorities, to whom a film distributor or exhibitor may submit any film not granted the censor's certificate.

"Outward Bound" an Example



An instance both of the obsolescence of the censors code, and the invidiousness to which his status exposes him, is provided by the Warner film "Outward Bound" now playing to good business at the Regal. Marble Arch, London. Because the film contained references to the hereafter and the spirit world, the British Board of Film Censors declined to grant it a certificate. Warners protested; the press protested. The censor stood with arms folded.

Argument that this was merely a photographed version of the Sutton Vane stage play which had been played on the London stage with the full approval of the Lord Chamberlain (stage censor), fell on deaf ears.

So Warners placed the film before the licensing committees of the London Middlesex and Surrey county councils.

These all agreed to give their permission for the exhibition of "Outward Bound" to AVERAGE ADMISSIONS AS AGAINST AVERAGE RECEIPTS. Above are the box office gauges of 20 cities, the black in each gauge representing the average admission price per seat; the white the average receipts per seat. Merely as an example let New York's 10 per cent on average admissions represent 10 cents. This would bring the average intake per seat to almost $2.10, a higher proportionate average than prevails in any other city.

ADVERSE MARKET LOWERS FILM ISSUES

Cruel Humor!

Chicago (QP)—If practical jokers must play jokes, it is much better to refrain from all betting. At least that is the experience of a musician at the Palace. He had four tickets on the Antry race last week, and the morning afterward received five cablegrams informing him that his winnings amounted to $45,000. Newspaper reporters and photographers arrived, he resigned his position, and is still awaiting the money from England. He'll wait a long, long time.

Ask Reduced Protection or More Prints in Exchanges

Cleveland—Exhibitors are asking protection reduction to 15 days instead of the present 42, or increased number of prints in exchanges, as insurance against films with worn sound tracks.

They claim it unfair for distributors to pass on prints to subsequent runs which are scratched and therefore noisy from first and second-run use.

Edgar B. Hatrick, general manager for Hearst film activities, is due in New York next week for a short stay prior to returning to Hollywood to supervise Cosmopolitan production.

Sales of Picture Stocks Light, With Warners the Most Active As New Low Is Reached

By THE ANALYST

Adverse market conditions affected motion picture issues on the various security markets during the past week, but the light turnover in film company securities suggested no important selling was going on and that the declines in leading amusement stocks and bonds reflected general market weakness.

Outside of the overhanging Fox Film financing, there were no new developments regarding the industry to stimulate activity in picture stocks in either direction and film shares on the stock exchange drifted with the rest of the list, which happened to be going downward.

A plethora of rumors attended the withdrawal of one of the leading banking interests reported to be underwriting the Fox issue.

Warners was one of the most active of the group, declining to a new low for the year under a steady flow of offerings, some of which were whispered to be coming from the direction of Wilmington, which used to be credited with accumulating the stock.

Eastman Kodak and Loew's were among the largest losers of the week, the former selling off from a high of 167½ to a low of 160⅛, from which it rallied a couple of points. RKO, Paramount and General Theatres were in supply and closed around their lows for the week. Pathe encountered good support, touching a new high for the year and holding comparatively steady, while Language Hash!

Hull, Que.—As long as they must make versions of films in different languages and play them before different native peoples, they might as well combine them. How is this: at a house here the British picture "Atlantic" played with French dialogue, in a Canadian theatre, with newspaper advertising in English, and for French-Canadians! On the program was an American comedy. It is not known whether Esquimaux were present.

Paramount Production at B. & D. Studios Now Seems Certainty

London—That Paramount will produce at the British and Dominion studios at Elstree, under the supervision of Robert Kane, now appears certain following further negotiations.

J. C. Graham has made no official announcement as yet, but it is understood several of Michael Arlen's stories will be filmed, including "The Green Hat." Paramount has obtained an option on part of the studio for several years.

Film Boards, with Diversified Activities, Win MPPDA Support

Mexico Will Ban Bandit Pictures

Mexico City—No longer will Mexicans see themselves in the films as heavily mustached villains and bandits. Films picturing such characters will be barred in the southern republic.

Governors of the various states of Mexico have entered an agreement with the Federal authorities whereby such films will be taboo.

A board of nationally known Mexicans has been named to pass on all such films. They will take into consideration the character, dress and mode of life of the character portrayed.

Lightman Contacts Justice Department on New Contract

A telephone conversation Thursday, and one on Friday, brought nearer, it is believed, an agreement on the new standard exhibition contract adopted at the 5-5-5 conference in Atlantic City.

M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., who came to New York in connection with a theatre deal with Publix, talked over long distance with the department of justice in Washington with a view of arranging a meeting between exhibitor and federal representatives so that an unofficial decision on provisions of the standard agreement might be given. Should such decision be favorable assurance has been given that the contract would be adopted by the distributors.

Announcement of Refinancing Of Fox Delayed Temporarily

The program for the refinancing of Fox Film Corporation through the floating of a $75,000,000 convertible bond issue will not be made public until early next week, according to Glenn Griswold, vice president and director of public relations for the company. Ironing out of last minute details of the plan necessitated the delay.

1930 Leads in Production of Outstanding Pictures, Hays Tells Members

MPPDA Directors

The Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, at its annual meeting on March 30, elected the following to the board of directors:

George McL. Baynes	F. L. Herron
Joe Brandt	J. J. Murdock
H. S. Brown	David Sarnoff
H. L. Clarke	J. M. Schenck
R. H. Cochrane	N. M. Schenck
Chas. H. Christie	Jos. Schnitzer
E. W. Hammons	Albert H. Warner
D .W. Griffith	Harry M. Warner
Will H. Hays	Adolph Zukor

Hays was reelected president and Carl E. Milliken continues as secretary.

The Film Boards of Trade, because of their diversified activities, have won the support of the members of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors.

Under the direction of C. C. Pettijohn, the boards will continue to operate despite the end of "compulsory" arbitration. This was the agreement reached at the annual meeting of the MPPDA, following a report by members assigned some few months ago to review the situation.

In the boards, it was pointed out there is a field force functioning for the entire industry which is indispensible.

Addressing members of the organization, Will H. Hays, re-elected president, said in effect:

"The public is beginning to vote thumbs down on the 'hard-boiled' realism in literature and on the stage which marked the post-war period," he said.

"The screen in recent months has done much to debunk the American gangster," Hays continued. "But the fact remains that too many gang films, however well treated the theme may be, tend to over-emphasize the subject matter. * * * I am glad to note, therefore, the decreasing importance of such themes in the production programs of 1931."

In 1930, Hays said, more features were produced of outstanding merit, not only from the entertainment but from the standpoint of community value, than in any previous year.

The past year saw a new record in the production of great features based upon historical, sociological, travel and other educational themes, he stated.

1930 showed a six to one increase over any previous year in the production of the higher-type problem plays on the screen. This refers to features of a character usually considered outside the range of popular appeal.

The year 1930 marked a great development from a production standpoint of the movement to serve the child audience. The experiment of a picture theatre for children was attempted, but failed for lack of public support.

"The true measure of achievement in pictures, as in any other art, is progress, not perfection," Hays declared. "Only the professional movie baiter would deny such achievement to the industry. Nevertheless the fact remains that no art can rest on its laurels. We shall always need constructive criticism from without. We shall always need unremitting vigilance from within.

However, in its program of self-regulation, the success of the industry challenges comparison with any instance of industrial or social progress effected through the fiat of law, the action of political censorship or the tyranny of dictatorship.

Tiffany and RKO-Pathe were elected to membership at the annual meet.

The Present Trend Adds to Individual Accounts

RKO One of First of Major Companies to Announce Personnel Increase

A shifting theatre map, which is increasing bookings to be sold individually, is bringing back into the limelight sales campaigns such as the industry knew a few years ago, increased branch salesmen and more intensive promotional activity.

In the forepart of 1930, it was predicted by several of the more prominent distribution executives that the day of the film salesman was past. The trend then, it was pointed out, was toward concentration through theatre mergers and circuit deals. Now, however, these same leaders agree, there has been a reversal of the situation. And this because many of the smaller houses are being turned back by the circuits to their original owners or to some other individual operator, thus necessitating larger sales forces.

RKO Pictures is one of the first of the major companies to announce an increase in its sales personnel, this despite the fact that there had not been previously a wholesale thinning of the salesmen's ranks of this organization.

Charles Rosenzweig, vice-president in charge of distribution, who has just returned from the West Coast following conferences with President Joseph I. Schnitzer and William LeBaron, announced that the company would have for distribution during the next 12 months 36 titles, and in order to close for this product with at least one-third of the potential bookings, the present sales force has been supplemented.

Taking into account those theatres which cannot be booked because of protection, it is estimated that between 7,000 and 8,000 accounts can be sold, with the individually owned houses outnumbering the major circuit owned by at least 1,200.

It is variously estimated that motion picture theatres in the U. S. total between 14,000 and 18,000, but protection and limited playing dates reduce the bookings for the individual distributing unit. It is estimated that there are 3,500 to 4,000 individual accounts, this number including operators of one, two, three and four theatres.

Monogram Is Set For 28 Features

Monogram Pictures, federation of regional distributors, headed by W. Ray Johnston, is lining up directors for the 28 features on the 1931-32 list. Trem Carr, vice-president, is heading production, Charles A. Post, Coast studio business manager and Ernie Hickson technical director.

Twelve melodramas and 16 Westerns are included. The former are "The Arm of the Law," "Ships of Hate," "Klondike," "The Western Limited," "The Law of the Sea," "Police Court," "Strangers of the Night," "Forgotten Women," "The Midnight Patrol," "Isle of Hunted Men," "The Fatal Alarm" and "In Line of Duty."

The Westerns, in two groups of eight, each to feature a star, include: "Dugan of the Badlands," "The Montana Kid," "The Land of Wanted Men," "The Law of the North," "So This Is Texas," "Oklahoma Jim," "Mason of the Mounted" and "The Man from New Mexico." The second eight are "Partners of the Trail," "Vanishing Men," "Galloping Through," "The Man from Death Valley," "The Ghost City," "Two-Fisted Justice," "The Honor of the Mounted" and "Single-Handed Sanders."

U Seeks to Solve Idle Print Problem

To solve the idle print problem, Universal is rapidly inaugurating a system of four central booking stations. The first is located in Chicago, where the plan is said to be successful; the second opens in New York April 6, and there will be one for the South in Dallas and another for the West Coast in either Los Angeles or San Francisco.

According to the system, duplicate booking records of the various exchanges will be kept by the central offices, and control of all prints will be in the hands of central bookers, who will date in bookings for exchanges not having sufficient prints and ship to the theatres designated by the exchange booker.

No Decision Reached by U On Successor for Rockne

Stunned by the fatal accident to Knute Rockne, noted football coach, executives of Universal have not yet given thought to his successor in the football sequences of the All-American Sports series. Twenty-six one-reel subjects will comprise this group of subjects to be produced in conjunction with Christy Walsh.

Rockne was killed in an airplane accident while en route to Universal City for a conference with Carl Laemmle.

Goe Resigns Tiffany Post To Join Hanson's Company

Carl J. Goe, for the last three years with Tiffany, has resigned to assume general managership of Hanson Corporation, distributor of commercial short product.

Goe's last post with Tiffany was that of sales manager, succeeding Oscar Hanson, whom he now joins.

A. H. Schnitzer Promoted

Ned E. Depinet, vice president and general sales manager of RKO Pathe, has appointed A. H. Schnitzer short subject sales manager, to assume his duties immediately. Schnitzer who is a veteran sales executive has been special representative of Depinet's home office staff. He came to RKO Pathe from the Pittsburgh office of RKO where he had been in charge since 1922, having continued in this post through the various mergers culminating in the present RKO Radio organization.

The new short subjects sales manager will meet the sales staff at the first national convention of RKO Pathe in Chicago in April, at which time he will outline the 1931-32 line-up of short product to be distributed by the organization.

Writers Studio "Kings", States W. A. Johnston

The weekly payroll of writers at the studios exceeds $250,000 and the yearly total is probably $15,000,000, states William A. Johnston, Hollywood general manager of Quigley Publications, who calls the writer the "king pin" of the studio, supplanting the director, in his article "Writer's Gold" in the New York Herald Tribune.

Talking pictures were responsible for the elevation of the writer, he states, noting that "Hollywood today houses the greatest writing industry this old world has seen thus far."

One company has erected a five-story building with 90 luxurious offices for its writing staff, he states. The great care required to produce talking pictures, with dialogue a new development, has caused producers to insist on air-tight scripts that will do away with useless "shooting."

"The status of the picture writer in the Hollywood studio right now tells the present day story of motion picture making. He is the king-pin in creative work.

"He has, to an extent, taken that position away from the director. Only the director who can write seems to be sure of retaining his prestige these days. And this radical change has come about because of talking pictures.

"In the early days of the silents, the director often wrote the story on his cuff. And if he changed his shirt the next day was of no literary consequence. The picture generally wrote itself, anyway.

"Later on, when motion pictures decided they were an art, the top-notch novelists came trooping to Hollywood; and that seems to be about all they did do. The script writers labored earnestly to put the masterpiece into picture form; but the director was the supreme factor. Quite often he would read the famous story and say: 'Now, I'll write a good one.' The novelists were generally amazed when their books appeared on the screen, and wondered who on earth wrote them. Again, pictures were frequently made in the film cutting rooms, strictly according to a film editor's idea of just what a story should be.

"Today this is all changed. A new element, called preparation, has come into picture production. The story anatomy, dialogue and all, is meticulously laid out, well in advance of the shooting. The preperation era runs from one month to as high as six. Everything goes down on paper like an engineer's set of blueprints."

Argentina Faces Film Famine

Buenos Aires—Producers' decision to suspend releases in Argentina because of duties threatens the country with a film famine.

Chicago Fights to Halt Double Bills

Taking its cue from Chicago, theatres in many sections of the country are going in for double featuring as never before.

Chicago's "pink" system, by which pictures play on "adult only" tickets, first began to find more or less widespread adoption many months ago. And now, double features are beginning to follow the same course.

Which does not, however, place the industry's stamp of approval on the system, as evidenced by decision of Balaban & Katz yesterday to turn over its two largest outlying Chicago de luxe houses, the Marbro and Granada, to double features in an attempt to force a show-down on the situation in that section of Chicago where the double feature "evil" has been most pronounced.

Local Allied and MPTOA units now are meeting in Chicago to curtail double and triple featuring.

Last fall, an agreement in Chicago failed to materialize because independents insisted on booking eliminations as the only basis of abandoning the doubling practice, but since that time canvasses have proved the exhibitors ready to cooperate since they found the objectionable practice unprofitable.

Illinois Allied Extends Scheme

Chicago (QP)—Illinois Allied plans to extend its booking circuit to include country and downstate theatres, in addition to the 35 Chicago houses now using the service, anticipating an eventual total of 100. Plans were developed at a meeting this week.

An attempt will be made to enroll entire membership of the organization. The meeting also approved playing of the Oscar Hanson sponsored reel and Allied's cooperative maximum buying agreement with Universal.

WILL YOU?—He'd like to take Marguerite Churchill to church—but not because he likes to listen to the choir.

LISTENING IN—Sally Eilers is afraid her boy friend is slipping, and she'd give a lot to know who's at the other end of the wire. It's hard to fool a wise girl.

LOST APPETITES—Not to mention lost bankrolls and watches when a banquet of leading citizens is rudely interrupted by a gang of uninvited guests. Something for the front page of tomorrow's paper.

JUST AN ARGUMENT—One of those traffic tie-ups where one word leads to another and another word leads to action. It looks as though Spencer Tracy is about to take the law in his own hands.

THE PITFALLS OF PRECEDENT and PRACTICE on the STAGE

By JAMES WILLIAM FITZPATRICK

WHEN the operation of grafting vocal chord on the camera had been successfully performed; when it became apparent that the patient would not only live but thrive; and when the jubilation consequent upon the realization of a theorist's dream was over, the makers of talking pictures found themselves for the first time, in the strict interpretation of the phrase, "in the show business." Added to the trials, problems, and perplexities of the studio they took on the difficulties and headaches and intricacies of the socalled legitimate stage with which, then and there, they came into active competition. There had been competition before but it was competition based on diversity of entertainment offered rather than on similarity.

The silent picture had long been sneered at and despised by purveyors of the spoken drama as a brat who had no proper place in the house of Thespis; film producers, distributors, exhibitors scorned as mere pushcart peddlers in the entertainment market; just nouveaux-riches in the category of amusement society. The consistent financial success and the growth in popular appeal of motion pictures after a time brought an alteration in that attitude but only so far as it had to do with the money making angle of the business. The feeling of superiority in other particulars remained and with it continued to persist a sort of inferiority complex among all and sundry connected with the film world. The producers had been told so long that they were lucky accidents, the actors had endured so silently the oft screamed epithet of "Ham" from their fellows, and the authors impressed so thoroughly that they were nothing but "hacks," that they believed it. It was all caused by the twaddle which had been written and preached—and accepted—on the Art of the Theatre. Now the only valid arts connected with the theatre are pantomime and writing because they alone contain its essence which is creation.

THE BLINDFOLD GUESSING TEST

It apparently never dawned upon picture producers that they were providing a home for pantomime against which the stage entrepreneurs had closed their theatres just as it never occurred to actors that they alone were working in an institution which fostered and developed a true art. Perhaps the truth had not been told them or if it had been sufficient emphasis and repetition had been neglected.

The most amazing feature of the situation lay in the fact that motion pictures steadily growing in power, vital with new and aggressive blood, and fecund with almost illimitable possibilities continued to look with deference upon the stage which, night after night, was losing its hold upon the public, which had ignored its potentialities, and was rapidly rotting from its passion for the drama of sex. With the successful making of speaking films, with the combination of the art of pantomime to the trade of the speaking stage any loitering sense of inferiority should disappear from the minds of everyone connected with the business.

The stage still retains, however, its uses for the picture industry. It furnishes an experimental laboratory in which the dramatic values of plays may be estimated; it presents a listening post from which reactions on audiences can be noted; and it gives an opportunity to observe the craftsmanship of players and the art of playwrights.

"It can be," to quote a shrewd observer, "an important contributor to the flow of motion picture material." Danger, however, lies in placing too much dependence on the standards of value set by the speaking stage and being fooled by the label, "A Broadway success." The reason is the fact that most Broadway "successes" concern themselves with something motion pictures have thrown into the junk heap as bad business, sex in its pornographic aspect and its provocative appeal.

No one with a sense of drama or an honest love for its presentation would suggest the complete elimination of "the desire of woman for the desire of man" from the storehouse of material proper for theatrical consumption. The stupid error

WHERE ELSE COULD YOU LIKE THESE

IF that Educational Pictures salesman seemed to strut just a little like a bantam rooster, and occasionally to crow like one, too, it's because he knows he's got the stuff you've been crying for . . . laughs! You know it, too, of course, because comedies like "A HOLLYWOOD THEME SONG", "GIRLS WILL BE BOYS", "DANCE HALL MARGE", "THE BRIDE'S MISTAKE", "PETE AND REPEAT", have been making audiences howl and exhibitors throw out their chests everywhere.

You may not know that salesman's latest dope, though... that Educational's spring releases are going to outstrip even these famous record breakers. "CRASHING HOLLYWOOD" has already started crashing ribs. "IN CONFERENCE" is one of the greatest satires Mack Sennett has ever done. And you just cannot understand that salesman's latest little flourish until you've seen "A FOWL AFFAIR." Then you'll flap your wings and do a little crowing yourself . . . that is, if you've got the GAYETY COMEDY series that brings you this greatest novelty comedy since sound.

Where else could you get comedies like these? And where else could you get advertising support for your short subjects like the steady month in and month out magazine advertising that is always making more customers for you when you play and plug these pictures?

THEY CAN BE HAD ONLY FROM

GET SHORT FEATURE COMEDIES . . . OR ADVERTISING SUPPORT LIKE THIS?

And why not? For a laugh is better than sulphur and molasses as a tonic . . . and, oh! how much sweeter to take.

Be happy, and healthier, too, by finding the picture show that includes one of Educational's new springtime talking comedies, and let the years and the worries roll away as you lose yourself in rollicking laughter. Any one of these three great comedies will surely make your ribs ache, but it will cure you of heartache, and maybe headache, too.

"A FOWL AFFAIR"

The most novel comedy that has come out of Hollywood in years. Chickens and ducks make up the cast . . . with human voices. It's a scream for anybody, of any age.

"IN CONFERENCE"

less to average, with Nevada in top place for overseating, boasting only of one seat for every three persons. Utah has four people for every seat and West Virginia five.

New York, California, Illinois and New Jersey each with eight persons per seat, are all below the national average.

New York Has 1,833 Accounts

Although all of the 21,284 accounts listed on the books of distributors are not in operation, nor are they all regular theatre structures (some are lodge halls, etc.), nevertheless, each is considered a theatrical account by major companies. They pay regular rental charges when operating.

Actual number of theatres (i. e., theatre buildings) is said to range between 14,000 and 18,000.

New York leads in the total number of accounts, having 1,833 with Illinois, and its 1,396 accounts, the runner-up. District of Columbia, with 48, and Delaware, 66, are, as usual, at the bottom of the list.

Elsewhere on this page appears a complete tabulated index of capacities by states, with the total number of theatres, populations and average persons per seat also listed.

Ontario Bill Provides 5% Quota for British Pictures

The measure is seen as a result of the recent inquiry under the Combines Act, and has already received second reading.

115,000,000 Pay 26¢ Per Week to Film Theatres of U. S.

Hollywood (QP)—The average American spends 26 cents a week to attend the motion picture theatre, according to figures revealed by the M. P. P. D. A. A total of 115,000,000, or nearly as many people as there are in the entire United States and dependencies, "go to the movies" every week, paying $30,000,000 for the privilege.

The Hays organization declares that there are 17,097 motion picture theatres in the United States, and gives 13,515 as the number of those wired.

The statistics further assert that two and a half billion dollars are invested in the world film industry, two billion of which represents its holdings in the United States.

Capone Says No On Film Report Of Buron Fitts

Chicago—Al (Scarface) Capone stated that Buron Fitts, Los Angeles prosecutor who claimed he had been approached relative to Capone's appearance in a film, is, as a prosecutor, a cracking good press agent.

Which was merely the Capone way of denying newspaper reports that he was to attack the citadel of picturedom. According to Fitts, Scarface Al was due to collect $1,000,000 from a producer who aimed to have him "shot" in the closing sequences.

Fitts said he would run Al out of town if he showed himself in Los Angeles, and Al said neither he nor anyone representing him, had ever spoken to Fitts, and furthermore, he intimated, had no desire to.

Quick Millions

(Fox)

Different Gangster Story

"QUICK MILLIONS" is an inside story on racketeering that ranks among the better class of gangster stories. Given very good direction by Rowland Brown and capably acted by Spencer Tracy, Marguerite Churchill, Sally Eilers, and Warner Richmond, the talker proves good entertainment for young and old.

Fast moving, the story by Courtney Terrett shows Tracy as a truck driver who aspires for more wealth and attains it through racketeering methods. He organizes the trucking associations and demands protection money. This racket and other hoodlum activities are exposed in the development of the story.

When Tracy, who through his endeavors becomes a ruling power in the affairs of the city, decides to go in for society, he turns the wrong way. Because of his power Marguerite Churchill is forced to tolerate him and he plans to marry her. She is in love with another lad, however, and marries him, much to Tracy's chagrin. Tracy plans to kidnap the bride on the wedding day but his henchmen, instead of helping him in his plans, turn against him and take him "for a ride."

Sally Eilers is the "girl who shares a flat with Tracy." She is forgotten when he gets the society idea and later turns against him. There is plenty of humor in the picture and it is well spotted making the rather heavy plot seem lighter.

Musicals and comedies would go well with this.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Rowland Brown. Story by Courtney Terrett and Rowland Brown. Additional dialogue by John Wray. Cameraman, Joseph Augusts. Sound by W. W. Lindsay, Jr. Art Director, Duncan Cramer. Costumes by Sophie Wachner. Release date, May 3, 1931. Footage, 6,286. Running time, 70 minutes.

Ladies' Man

(Paramount)

Sophisticated Murder

WILLIAM POWELL plays the gigolo in "Ladies' Man," his latest for Paramount. He accepts money on which to live from a married woman, accepts the attentions of her daughter, and otherwise disports himself as we've been taught he-men shouldn't. But he holds the sympathy of his audience because of his personality and because he reforms just before he pays for his sins. He pays for them by being shot in the shoulder by Gilbert Emery, irate husband, and tossed out of a skyscraper window.

He leaves Kay Francis, the third woman in the case, and the only one he ever has really loved, weeping in the lobby of the hotel. She arrives just a few minutes too late to save him from Emery. Behind, he also leaves Olive Tell, the disillusioned wife, and Carole Lombard, her daughter. Emery gives himself up to the police after leading a grand march in the ballroom of the hotel. Powell was to have led it with Emery's wife at his side. Emery's quick recovery from the tragic encounter seems to have been intended as a sensational denouement.

Great liberties have been taken by Paramount in adapting the story to the screen. It is turned completely around and the action of the Rupert Hughes novel has been reversed. Emery, in leading the grand march with his wife, is called upon by Lothar Mendes to act his way through a highly theatrical and obviously unreal situation.

The drama has a society background, and this is well carried out both in the exquisite costuming of the women in the cast and in the elegance of the settings

Powell is good in his role, that of a man who attracts women, not because he attempts to, but because of the sheer force of his personality. Emery gives a capable performance. Miss Tell does a smooth, workmanlike job, and Carole Lombard, as the daughter, also handles her part well. She has one drunken scene which is exceptionally well done. Kav Francis' work holds to its usually high standard throughout the production.

The adaptation, and this goes for the direction as well, is tactfully handled. Faced with the difficulty of taking a popular leading man, throwing him into such a part and still retaining the sympathy of the audience gave both Mankiewicz and Mendes some difficult problems. Powell's lines are exceptionally well written and well read

Comedy shorts and cartoon numbers will go best with this film.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Lothar Mendes. From the novel by Rupert Hughes. Adaptation and continuity by Herman J. Mankiewicz. Photographed by Victor Milner. Release date, April 26, 1931.

Meet the Wife

(Christie)

Light and Airy

THERE were plenty of laughs when this farcical comedy made by Christie was shown to a preview audience. The play, "Meet the Wife," is packed with amusing incidents, with laughable lines and with good light acting on the part of three accomplished players, Harry Myers, Lew Cody and Laura LaPlante. A. Leslie Pearce directed forced action into the vehicle whenever it had the slightest tendency to drag, and did an excellent job of injecting a spirit of fun into it.

Myers is cast as a second husband who hears constantly about the first and who is henpecked by Laura LaPlante, the wife. The time comes when the wife decides to entertain a noted British novelist, who turns out to be her first husband, played by Lew Cody. Miss LaPlante had been under the impression he was lost in a fire and explosion, but he had decided on a change of air and went to England.

Cody arrives just in time to save his daughter, Joan Marsh, from marrying the ailing and artificial Claude Allister. He sees that she marries William Janney, newspaper reporter. However, his constant embracing of both his wife and daughter causes much comment before his true identity is revealed.

Myers, very much perturbed by his return, takes the keys to his London apartment, his steamer ticket, and finds himself a fire and an explosion to get lost in. All ends well with Lew in the role of family man.

Pearce and the entire cast have handled the situations delicately, and there is light humor instead of banality throughout.

The play, it is more that than a motion picture, for there are few changes of scene, has good dialogue, written by Lynn Starling. Glenn Kershner has touched the direction off with some artistic photography. There are slight modifications from the stage success of the same name.

Myers proved a surprise. After two and a half years in the silent, he reveals a voice which adds to his personality. The youngsters, William Janney and Joan Marsh, acquitted themselves well.

Dramatic shorts and musicals are best here for program balance.

Doctors' Wives

(Fox)

Pleasing Little Picture

THE story thread is very, very slight in "Doctors' Wives," yet the picure, skillfully directed by Frank Borzage, comes through as a pleasing, although entirely unimportant, piece of entertainment. What it does demonstrate, however, is the charming running mates that Warner Baxter and Joan Bennett make.

Baxter is the doctor and Miss Bennett is the wife. It takes a good deal of footage to establish the argument that doctors' wives have to put up with a good many things, such as neglect, real and fanciful, simply because the rigors of the profession give the medicos no way out.

Two secondary plots are introduced to develop the idea. Vivian Crosby (Helene Millard) is the feminine menace who makes a violent play for Baxter and almost succeeds in wrecking the peace of the establishment. The male menace, Victor Varconi, is a research doctor who picks up Miss Bennett where Baxter lets her down. As you might imagine, it all works out to a happy conclusion.

The performances are uniformly good. Baxter and Miss Bennett are completely charming and Varconi gives a splendid performance. Many of the chuckles are provided by Cecilia Loftus, who plays an aunt of Baxter's.

Playing musicals and comedies on the bill with this feature should give the best results.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Frank Borzage. Story by Henry and Sylvia Liefer-ant. Adaptation by Maurine Watkins. Edited by Jack Bennis. Cameraman, Arthur Edeson. Release date, March 15, 1931. Footage, 7,354. Running time, 82 minutes.

The W Plan

(British International)

Good War Drama

A British International product being released in this country by Radio Pictures which has considerable merit. Despite the recent deluge of war dramas, this story of the British espionage system, its horrors and manifest complexities are well told in "The W Plan." A British officer on searching a captured German finds a sketch of the W plan and is assigned to get the original draft. He does get the original after a series of nerve-wracking exploits in German terrain.

There is a love story knitted through the series of events the British officer experiences and ultimately leads to their coming together in Switzerland, a destination decided upon when the officer was forced to leave his German sweetheart at a crucial moment.

The action by a foreign cast is superb, as is the direction. A number of scenes, those of the German underground system which is a part of the W plan, are excellently done. The picture as a whole is realistically depicted and deserves much credit.

Lighten the balance of the program with comedies, cartoons or musicals.

Produced by British International. Distributed (U. S.) by Radio Pictures. Story by Graham Seton. Director, adaptor and producer, Victor Saville. Release date, March 15, 1931. Footage, 8,824. Running time, 98 minutes.

SHORTS

Parents Wanted

(RKO Pathe)

Fair Entertainment

A Folly comedy number, but nothing to become greatly enthused over. Concerns the tight spot into which the young hero gets himself by trying to fool the boss into giving him an increase in salary on the plea that he wants to marry the latter's niece. He produces as his mother and father, his landlady and a down-and-outer he had picked up on the street. When the boss comes over for a visit, the parent and "parents" do not click very perfectly. Call it mild entertainment and let it go at that. Running time, 22 minutes.

Making Good

(Vitaphone)

Satisfactory

Joe Penner, the stuttering comedian of the Vitaphone lot, makes a brave attempt to be amusing, but only succeeds partially, if that. He works too hard, and that never produces good comedy. The idea behind the short is good, however, and there is a plentitude of entertaining situations, all of which help a great deal to make the comedy at least mildly entertaining.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Cat's Paw

(Universal)

Only Fair

Daphne Pollard is bound for a bird exhibition in San Francisco in this comedy, and she is better than usual. Most of the action is taken up with the extreme difficulties, and the general commotion she causes aboard when the pet she has smuggled on the train despite the objections of the ticket-taker makes its presence known. Running time, 17 minutes.

Call of Mohammed

(RKO Pathe)

Fine

Tom Terriss is the wandering leader of the audience once more in this Vagabond Adventure, visiting the land of the Arab, through the famed Khyber Pass, and stopping momentarily at the various sacred shrines of the people's prophet. Again, as usual, the excellent accompanying line of description by Terriss does more than a fair share of adding to the effectiveness of the short. The pictures are artistically splendid Running time, 10 minutes.

Peculiar Pets

(Ideal Pictures)

Interesting

This short indicates how almost any species of wild animal may be domesticated, including squirrels, ferrets and lions. Several shots from foreign libraries are particularly interesting, and the general appeal is quite wide.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Old Hokum Bucket

(RKO Pathe)

Good

One of the Aesop Fables series and it does quite well by itself and its authors. The animated character animals pay a visit to the farm, imbibe not wisely but too well of the peppo flake, and proceed with their amusing antics, which are peculiar but funny. Running time, 7 minutes.

Heroes of the Flames

(Universal)

Good Stuff

Here are the first three episodes of Universal's new 12 episode serial, and if the rest are like this sample, the series is worth playing and playing hard. The youngsters are going after it with open arms, and almost anyone will get a real kick out of it. Action, excitement, adventure and romance are plentifully sprinkled through the record of the lives of the big city fire-fighters. It's hokum, of course, but that makes no difference and there are thrills from the word go. Tim McCoy plays the fireman hero, and just as an example, in the first reel, he rescues a youngster from under the fire apparatus and then the youngster's sister from a burning building. Marion Shockley, as the sister, overacts a bit but is satisfactory, McCoy is excellent, but Bobbie Nelson, child player, is irritatingly fictitious in his acting. The carry-over is neatly accomplished through the stunt of a reporter hinting the coming story over the telephone to a re-write man. Robert Hill directed in splendid style. The first episode is due for release on June 2, with each running 17 minutes.

Twisted Tales

(RKO Pathe)

Not Much

A fairly weak effort in the comedy direction, revolving around a lion and a lion skin. The henpecked husband's wife refuses to permit him to go to the fancy dress affair, and his friend borrows the lion skin costume. Of course, a real lion breaks out of the zoo, the wife comes home and mistakes a real for a fake and that is about all. The comedy is rather non-existent, and the laugh spots few. Arthur Houseman, Marion Douglas, Gertrude Astor and Lorin Raker play the parts. Running time, 22 minutes.

Honeymoon Trail

(Vitaphone)

Poor

It may be a good idea to play scenic shots in the picture of a honeymoon journey, but when the recording is poor, the shots not clear, and the material more or less ancient, the idea becomes a very bad one. The wedding is supposed to be an exterior, but it is a great deal different from the actual exterior shots.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Dublin and Nearby

(M-G-M)

Gets By

One of the Burton Holmes "Around the World" travelogues, with scenes of Ireland, its inhabitants, customs and geography. The people of the country are caught by the camera at work and play, but photography and recording are not at all times sufficiently sharp, which is a sad defect, particularly in a travelogue number. Fair is the rating. Running time, 10 minutes.

Partners

(Vitaphone)

Excellent

Billy Caxton of the legitimate musical comedy stage puts over his act, including a great line of chatter and some splendid acting, in a way that calls for applause. As the boss who is broke, owes an employee three months' salary and is in danger of losing his girl, he is fine. He finally disposes of a piece of property he owns, lands a steady job and all is well.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Good

Tom Terris, in this number of the Vagabond Adventure series, takes his film audience to the capital of Cambodia, in the Far East. A stop in the town and then to the ruins of the ancient king's palace. The photography is striking, the ruins picturesque and Terris' running fire of dramatic description interesting. As usual, a bit of drama is woven through the combination travelogue-adventure film. On a par with the others. Running time, 11 minutes.

(Vitaphone)
A Corker

This Looney Tune number rates near superlatives, thanks paticularly to really new ideas in cartoon material. The shot in which the dog buys a frankfurter which leaps up and cries, "Mammy," just before being eaten, is laugh matter anywhere, any time, whether it's new or not. Looney Tunes are good.—Running time, 7 minutes.

In the Good Old Summer Time
(Ideal Pictures)
Only Fair

For the most part devoted to short sequences of Mother Nature blooming the time of sunshine and flowers. Here and there, a shot of animal life. Meant to tease people while the winter remains. Light, but somewhat entertaining. Allyn B. Carrick prepared the piece for the screen.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Tennis Top-Notchers
(RKO Pathe)
Fine

The numerous tennis players and fans in the country should get a real kick out of this explanation and demonstration of tennis strokes by Vincent Richards, world top-notcher. Various other famous players, including Suzanne Lenglen, Bill Tilden and Helen Wills, are shown in match play. Attractive girls as pupils help a bit. The interest is wide and Richard's voice excellent. Running time, 11 minutes.

(Vitaphone)
Great

The Brittons and their orchestra, who were spotted at the New York Palace, and went over with a tremendous success, do their act for the films in this number. Musical clowns, extremely funny, and they smash instruments in a very funny manner.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Birds of a Feather

Fine

The youngsters especially should derive some real enjoyment from this highly interesting nature study devoted exclusively to myriad species of birds. Good for a bright spot on any program.—Running time, 8 minutes.

(Sennett)
Barnyard Laughs

There are a lot of good laughs in this wild story of the Wild West, with Marjorie Beebe and some good gags getting the best ones. Marjorie, as usual, is being wooed by the awkward Harry Gribbon. Good-looking Frank Eastman comes along and wins a place in her affections. Harry loses her and catches the very devil from Andy Clyde. The plot features Trixie, a pet horse, and a mule and both are good. The background is farmlife, including smoke houses, swimming holes and stables. Some of it is old slapstick. Young Babe Stafford directed. It's at the Sennett par, not over, not under.

Winning Putts
(RKO Pathe)
Appeal

Johnny Farrell, golf star, continues his series of golf instructions made palatable for film consumption. He demonstrates various grips and difficult shots with the accompanying verbal description. Opens with a young lad going around the course, but it's nearly impossible to understand what he is saying. Otherwise wide appeal and interesting. Running time, 10 minutes.

Disappearing Enemies
(RKO Pathe)
Only Fair

The story of two old sweethearts, who are accidentally brought together after years of separation by the marriage of their niece and nephew, respectively, who have invited the uncle when the aunt unexpectedly drops in. It might have been a pretty good straight short, but as a comedy it just about isn't.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Monkey Business
(Ideal Pictures)
Good

More different types of monkeys than anyone could believe existed, are here shown in a variety of closeups. They take their food and perform tricks before the camera. Good general appeal.—Running time, 8 minutes.

adult audiences. Other local committees are to be approached, and it is likely that in only a few cases will the decision of the censor be upheld.

Now Seek Supreme Power

Meanwhile a strong parliamentary committee, of which Miss Ellen Wilkinson M.P. is the organizing secretary, is pressing the government to intervene, and set up a national film censorship with supreme powers.

The censors report just issued shows that 2,275 subjects—an aggregate length of 7,209,306 feet—were examined and certificated during 1930.

Twelve films were totally rejected and a further 16 are held for drastic cutting before being passed. During the year exception was taken to 191 films for different reasons a few of which were:

For showing the hereafter or spirit world; the solemnization of the Eucharist; references to birth control; uncivilized acts in warfare; irreverent quotations from the Bible; soldiers moaning and groaning in war films; British officers and soldiers in unfavorable light, and brutal attacks with broken bottles.

The censor now suggests that a practice adopted by some producers, of submitting stories and scripts to him before production should be extended. But he stresses the fact that any opinion expressed as to the suitability of a scenario or subject, cannot affect the ultimate judgment of his examiners when they see the film "since so much depends upon the way in which the subject is treated."

Films He Won't Pass

Yet it is well known that however delicately certain subjects bearing on phases of orthodox religions are treated, the censor will not give them his blessing. Nor will he pass Soviet films, many of which have been exhibited in this country only under local license.

The film industry may possibly have much to lose by the appointment of a Governmental Censorship, because political seesaws might affect the stability of the system.

Therefore it is time for intense pressure to be brought from within the trade itself, to secure modification and modernization of the code at present followed. American producers can do much to secure for their British affiliates this very necessary change in policy.

Screen Music

In recognition of the importance of music as an element of the sound picture, both in its decorative quality and its function as an instrument of narration, MOTION PICTURE HERALD will on occasion present special discussions of musical treatments in current productions.

Joseph O'Sullivan

Joseph O'Sullivan, with a background of musical and motion picture experience, will contribute a series of articles on screen music. They are to be written decidedly from the standpoint of a musician and an appreciator of music, but in terms calculated to be clear and interesting to any showman or layman.

O'Sullivan studied music under Karl Schmidt at Louisville, Ky. He became in turn a dramatic and music critic and went adventuring in musical activities in Germany. Subsequently, he became stage director for the Boston English Opera Company, touring the United States and Canada for several seasons. He later organized the Chicago English Opera Company. In 1916, in World War days, he joined the editorial staff of Mutual Film Corporation, where he had charge of musical settings. In that period he composed several numbers especially aimed at their availability in motion picture scoring, and now to be found in every music library. He also scored several notable productions. His next musical post was in charge of presentations on the Granat Circuit in Mexico, headquartering in Mexico City, with 26 houses to handle.

Some seven years ago O'Sullivan took up editorial and promotional work with the Hodkinson organization and went thence to Pathe through assorted mergers. He is intimately familiar with the industry from production to exhibition.

The first article from him will deal with the remarkable score and musical treatment of "Tabu," the Murnau screen legend of the South Sea.

of 1931 the $1.80 a share reported for the period last year, but the company is considered to be one of the soundest financially in the film business. Total assets rose from $236,710,407 on December 28, 1929, to $240,967,222 on March 29, 1930, and present position is reported strong.

Additional Loss for Warners

Warners, which for the first quarter of its fiscal year, the three months ended November 30, 1930, showed the disappointing net of $1,576,421, against $5,629,109 in the 1929 period, probably will show a further loss in its report for the second quarter, the three months ended February 28, as that period includes the year-end holiday season, but opinion is that March, April and May will show at least as good as the first quarter.

Earnings of Fox for 1930 have been estimated at $5.50 a share. For the 39 weeks ended September 27, 1930, the company reported net income of $10,104,194, or $4.00 a share, against $8,337,196, or $3.30 a share in the 1929 period. The balance sheet as of June 30, 1930, showed a strong position, listing total assets of $192,524,313, against $124,243,716 on December 28, 1929, and current assets of $31,017,994, against current liabilities of $12,552,133.

Among the smaller units, the reports of Consolidated Film and Trans-Lux make fairly good comparisons. The former reported for 1930 net of $2,309,311, against $2,389,373 in 1929, while the balance sheet revealed current assets to liabilities ratio was 3 to 1. Trans-Lux earnings held up well in 1930 and the company is expected to benefit from the new chain which it is operating in conjunction with RKO.

KANE

Nothing Succeeds Like—

Chicago (QP)—B. & K., months ago unimpressed by the cast of "Little Caesar" and crowded with bookings at the time, turned down the gangster picture. Soon afterward, the picture opened in New York and the rumor spread that quite a few cash customers dropped in to see it. B. & K. was willing to reconsider, but in the meantime Warner had sold the Loop run to the Woods. There were some words but they ceased when, in the discussion, it was learned that Warner wanted the picture for the Orpheum anyway and that the intention was to play it day and date with the Woods.

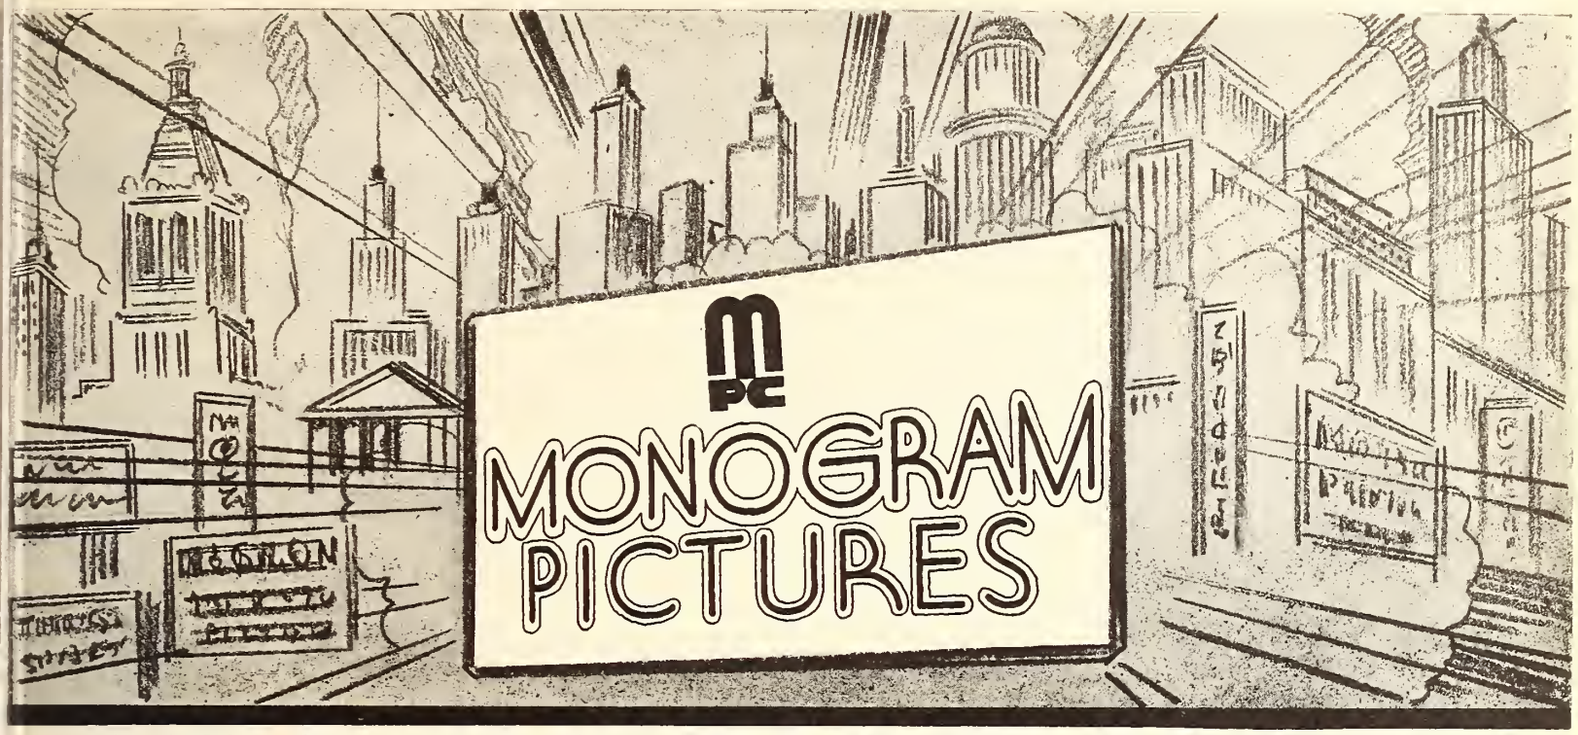
When and if "Little Caesar" emerges from the police building detention camp, both theatres expect it to break house records. The Woods management is confident of a new high gross despite the fact that it will lower its admission to sixty cents top for the picture's run in order to equalize the Orpheum competition.

Chicago Sponsors Ready For Commercial Field

Said to Obviate Transportation of Sound Equipment Between Sets or Location

Chicago (QP)—Half of the local membership of the S.M.P.E., together with representatives of theatrical publications, witnessed a new sound recording over telephone wires last week. The feat was staged by the developers of a system which now is ready for commercial marketing. It comprised the shooting of 5,000 feet of film in the studios of the Chicago Film Laboratories on the 21st floor of the Furniture Mart, the sound being recorded by telephone wire in the Jenkins & Adair laboratories on Belmont avenue, eight miles distant. Orchestral music, dialogue and vocal turns by members of the cast of Earl Carroll's "Sketch Book" comprised the shots.

The negatives were rushed to New York by plane for development and transposition and were back in Chicago three days later for a showing at the Castle Theatre.



The practical advantage claimed for the new recording system is that it obviates the necessity of transporting sound equipment between separated sets or locations. The "mikes" and a portable mixer are the only sound equipment which accompany the cameras. The actual recording equipment is located permanently at a central laboratory, synchronization being obtained by voice signals over a direct telephone wire and by the timing of acts in rehearsal to conform to the recording speed of 90 feet a minute.

Whitman Sound Corporation of New York, which co-operated with Jenkins & Adair in developing the system, announces that contracts for its installation have been completed with major studios.

Raw Stock Firm Seek Dominance at All Film Plants

new stocks, the Dupont special panchromatic and the Eastman supersensitive panchromatic. Movietone City and all Fox studios use Eastman negatives exclusively.

However, submerged under the cloak of diplomacy as they were, the reverberations of the war of the raw stock makers, were to be felt if not heard. The battle for dominance in the negative film field is raging through the studios, from Hollywood to Long Island City.

Technical representatives of both concerns were heard in discussions of their product at the Academy meeting.

J. Wesley Smith of Dupont said that the color sensitivity of his company's new panchromatic was of the same scale and range as in the standard panchromatic emulsion, but that from 40 to 60 per cent less light was required and that a considerably finer grain was achieved. This, he pointed out, thereby entailed no change in the coloring or type of sets used in the studios.

Emory Huse, representing the Eastman interests, set forth that their film had three times the sensitivity of the standard Eastman panchromatic film under tungsten incandescent lights and six times as much sensitivity under sunlight. He also claimed for his product less grain and high photographic quality, with an over-all increased speed for the full range of colors, giving tonal relations identical with the old standard panchromatic.

Weeks of Movietone City, speaking for the actors, remarked that the new fast films caused less eye strain on the set and eliminated the intense heat from the lamps. John Nicholaus of the Metro laboratory reported that the new film added no laboratory problems in that it did not have to be handled in absolute darkness, requiring only a dimming of dark room light. L. E. Clarke of the technical staff of RKO Pathe said that a survey had indicated that the electrical costs had not yet been reduced in four of the six studios using the new fast stock, yet, because a reduction of light had been achieved not by cutting the number of electricians and lamps but by the use of smaller bulbs.

Cameramen at the meeting expressed approval of the new stock and reported on some extraordinary night photography under the normal night lighting of downtown Los Angeles. Two hundred members were in attendance at the meeting. Another session on the same subject is scheduled for an early date. The subject of negative stock is a heated one in Hollywood.

PRECEDENT AND PRACTICE ON THE STAGE

which the contemporary stage made—and is making—was not in looking at sex as a fact of life worth consideration but as the only subject worth dealing with in the theatre. The movement toward the fleshpots started over a decade ago with the presentation of the bawdy bedroom farces of "Getting Gertie's Garter" type. It fed the appetites of people who wanted to laugh and who did not care much where the laugh came from or where it went. It began with a joke and descended logically and inevitably season after season, and landed finally in the pit with "The Captive." Missing out any thought of morals the price paid has been appalling. In the time since the stage degenerated into a stamping ground for Priapus it has not uncovered a single worthwhile playwright, developed a first class actor, nor brought to light a cultured, broad visioned producer. It has succeeded not only in corrupting authors, effeminizing actors, and disheartening producers but also emasculating critics so completely that were the reviews of the play reports not accompanied with a byline it would be impossible to detect whether they had been written by men or women, or neither. Incidentally it has created an antagonism toward itself expressed in the movements for a censorship, it has broken the habit of playgoing with resultant loss of patronage for really good plays, and it has stirred an attitude of suspicion and mistrust on every side. The bitterest comment this writer has heard on the state of the Broadway stage was made to him last week not by a professional smut-hunter nor a fanatic reformer but by the proprietor of a speakeasy who said he spent two days trying to select a play to which he felt free to take his little daughter as a reward for standing at the head of her class at school. Surely the speaking stage can, and does, contain a field for observation by the producers of talking pictures. But it should be approached without any illusions as to its dangers.

One of the great money makers of the past two seasons is a piece called "Strictly Dishonorable." It was listed long and high by the ticket speculators and it played to capacity business for months in New York and in some cities on the road. Speaking personally it was the sloppiest trash, the mawkiest of sentimentality, and the most utterly vicious thing I have seen in many a long night not only for what it said and did but especially because of the inference it made possible. Baldly put it concerned the adventure of a country maiden who came to the city theoretically to be married, but really hoping to be seduced. She invites seduction by an egregious opera singer and the big scene exhibits her in a towering rage of disappointment when he refuses to be the party of the second part. The last act shows the pair on matrimony bent and the presumptive moral is that country maidens can start prairie fires and come out of the ensuing conflagration with a wedding ring. The play, an unqualified box office success, has been bought for production by Universal Pictures Corporation. But if anything is made of it other than a stenchy foulness the campaign for an increased belief in the possibility of miracles will receive a great impetus forward. When motion picture producers go to the theatre hunting for material to use in their business they should keep their fingers crossed. What made a New York holiday may prove a Hollywood holacaust and a "Broadway sensation" develop into a motion picture theatre tragedy.

"Strictly Dishonorable," which appears to have so completely displeased Mr. Fitzpatrick, also seems to have been one of the season's most ardently pursued pieces of stage material. Universal has had some remarkable bids for the play by Paramount as a vehicle for Maurice Chevalier and by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for Ramon Navarro. More than likely the play would have been sold by Universal to one of the bidders at a greater immediate profit than is likely from production and distribution if it were not that it has been made a "leader" in the season's sales campaign. The picture version will not be released until the autumn, after the close of the stage runs. Meanwhile John Stahl has been assigned to the direction of the piece and the preparation of a treatment will be begun shortly.

Consolidated Film reacted to a new 1931 low.

Over on the curb exchange, Loew's debenture rights acted in sympathy with the shares on the Big Board and sold off sharply, but on a very light turnover. Trans-Lux ran into a wave of profit-taking following a rise to new high ground and reacted, while National Screen Service showed a loss of more than two points in light trading.

The decline in the common shares on the stock exchange had little effect on General Theatre preferred, which held around 28, while Fox Theatres A eased off a fraction. Columbia Pictures shares were inactive. In the low priced bracket Sentry Safety Control has turned over in fair quantities, but displayed little net change. The company is reported to have developed important sources of new income through an expansion program started last year and is said to be receiving sizable orders for a home talkie machine which it recently started manufacturing.

Amusement issues tended lower in a generally unsettled bond market, the largest declines being recorded in the convertible descriptions, which naturally reacted with their relative stocks. Warners 6s led the decline in this division. Loew 6s, with warrants, and General Theatre 6s sold off sharply, while Paramount issues and Pathe 7s were steady against the trend. On the curb exchange American Seating 6s made their appearance for the first time in several weeks and came out on the tape at a net gain of more than two points.

Stock Melons Cut by Firms Allied With Films

Melons were cut this week by a number of companies associated with the motion picture industry, notably among them the following:

Claude Neon, 40 per cent; Consolidated Film preferred, 50 per cent; K-A-O seven per cent preferred, $1.75 quarterly; National Screen Service, 50 cents; National Theatre Supply preferred, $1.75 quarterly; Orpheum, $2 quarterly; Universal preferred, $2 quarterly.

HOLLYWOOD

EXPERIENCE IN SOUND PRODUCTION IS ELIMINATING WASTE AT STUDIOS

STAR-GAZER

PREMATURE

ONVINCED that reports of the death of Byron Morgan, the writer, were slightly premature, I dropped in at First National to see him. He told me that he was quite alive, that his whole family was well, and that he was working hard. In fact, he proved he was working hard by revealing to me that he had only recently completed adapting "Five Star Final," Louis Weitzenkorn's stage play, in record time.

A check-up disclosed that he had written the script containing between 15,000 and 20,000 words, in two days less than three weeks, or just 16 days. This is rapid work, and is a mark to shoot at. It is natural, however, that he should be rather snappy on this sort of thing because he has been working at it for 13 years. This too, is something of a record.

For six years he pounded a typewriter at Famous. Four more at Metro, and the rest has been spent at Universal and First National. He knows the mechanics of picture writing.

He has been doing picture stories since he was 28, a bit young to cash in one's checks.

LAUGH

There's a laugh in Byron Morgan's entry into the business of picture writing. Perhaps the more conservative will smile. But it's interesting, anyway.

Morgan, until he was 27, was not a writer. He was born at Carthage, Mo., had spent much time in San Antonio, and had been in California for several years prior to bursting into print.

He had been a trolley motorman, lumber mover, traveling salesman, a bar tender, hotel clerk, and laborer. But never a writer.

Suddenly, the idea of writing for the screen intrigued him. He was, at that time, an automobile salesman. He dashed off a yarn about automobile racing, with "J. P.", the bear (Theodore Roberts played the role later) the cub, (Anne Little) and Toodles Waldron (Wally Reid) and tried peddling it.

The industry frowned at his efforts. They couldn't see the yarn. He wrote two more, and the industry turned those down.

Not at all discouraged, he sent the stories to George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post. Lorimer took them immediately. He asked for more. Morgan wrote ten in all.

The industry read the stories and liked them very much. To the extent of buying them.

He was set.

Only 16 Days Required For Ordinary Film

Improvements in Recording Speed Camera Work Through Cutting Down on Retakes

By EDWARD CHURCHILL

Hollywood (QP)—Studios, after three years of experimentation, have succeeded in eliminating most of the waste in time and film which characterized the making of the first sound productions. Investigation reveals that shooting schedules have been shortened, there are fewer takes per scene, and there is a far better spirit of cooperation than there was during the first two years of sound, when no one apparently knew what to do next.

Major studios today are completing pictures of program length in approximately 16 working days. Special productions are running longer, taking between 25 and 50 days. Independent companies, turning out product for state right distribution, are shooting in as little as six days. These pictures are mostly Westerns.

These schedules are far shorter than those of the silent days. The speeding up of production is due in part to the fact that the director is sticking close to the script and is rehearsing carefully, and that there is arising a definitely established technique. Improvements in recording also are aiding in cutting down the number of retakes and are adding to mechanical efficiency.

Among the recent improvements are "direction finding" microphones, which eliminate extraneous noises, molybdenum light valves, which do not break as often as the old style valves, noiseless recording, and the constantly increasing use of multiple cameras.

Youngster Rising

Babe Stafford, 22, being groomed as a director by Mack Sennett, has just completed his second comedy, "The Cowcatcher's Daughter," and soon will be shot into several roles to widen his knowledge of acting and camera values. Stafford has been directing Harry Gribbon, former musical comedy star, Andy Clyde, Scotch comedian, Marjorie Beebe and Frankie Eastman.

Journey's End

People come from almost anywhere to break into motion pictures, but it begins to look as if Louis Faillot has shattered all existing records. Faillot arrived here this week from Cape Town, Africa, and asked a job of George Archainbaud,

HOTEL ROOSEVELT,
Senegal River, Africa

Mr. Jay Shreck,
Quigley Publishing Co.,
1790 Broadway, New York,

Dear Jay:

Please forgive me for running off so abruptly without giving two weeks notice. As you know I have always wanted to be a motion picture producer, and inasmuch as the center of picture production has changed from Hollywood to Africa I thought it would be a good idea for me to hang around where all the big productions are being made.

I am in a little trouble, please. I borrowed $120 and a camera to come out here and shoot a picture. I figured Africa is the one place where I could get a whole cast free.

Well, Jay, you'll never imagine how this place is. First of all I invested the $120 in glass beads, gum drops, alarm clocks, and opera hats, because I heard that was what the natives liked. It's all a lie, Jay.

As soon as I got off the boat I was met by a delegation from the Chamber of Commerce who wanted to know if I intended to hire union labor and Equity actors, or not. I said I intended to shoot animals and what kind of animals belonged to a union anyway, and you know what they did? They sent a cable to Will Hays. I have not heard from Will yet.

Early the next morning I began my safari into the interior. They don't call it "safari" out here, though. It's "location." I met a fellow at the hotel who's acting as my guide. He used to be an assistant director at Paramount, and we visited a pigmy village. The pigmy village has a Chamber of Commerce, too, and they invited me to make a speech at their Tuesday luncheon. They also wanted to know what Paramount was selling at, because a lot of them have stock in the company. I am very surprised, Jay.

There was one pigmy who looked interesting. I asked him if he'd mind letting me photograph him. He said it was all right and he went into his hut, coming out with a makeup box and another pigmy, who he introduced as his press agent. Just before I began shooting he came over and asked me whether I understood he was to get $10 a day, and not $7.50. This was a surprise to me, but he explained he was registered in Central Casting and also that he had worked in 14 other pictures, so he was worth more because of his experience. He wouldn't take the glass beads or the opera hat. He also wanted his name in the featured billing.

This wasn't so much of a shock, Jay, as about the animals. After lunch I took a little private exploring trip with my gun but I couldn't find any animals, only a little pekinese which belonged to one of the native girls who said she worked in "Trader Horn." But the girl gave me a telephone number where I could call up about animals.

I called up the number and a man made an appointment to see me. He came to the hotel in a big Lincoln. I told him I wanted to shoot some animals fighting. "What kind of animals?" he asked. "Well," I answered, "we can't tell what animals we'll run across." For a while, the man explained to me later, he thought I was crazy. His job is to arrange animal fights. He could give me a good lion-hippopotamous fight for $200. It's usually $300, he said, but his very best lion is sick with Kleig eyes and he'd have to give me his second best one. But this one was good, too, he promised, and had been in some of the very best productions.

There is a lot more, Jay, but what is the use of explaining it all, you get the idea. I was wondering, Jay, seeing as we've been such old friends, if you could please let me have fare home. And if you can't do that—maybe I could have the Herald agency out here? Believe me, we need one. Hollywood has nothing on this place for movie actors.

Sincerely,

NORMAN KRASNA

Film Discussion

A discussion of the practical use of the new high speed panchromatic negative film stocks recently brought out by Eastman and Dupont was held on March 31 by the technician's branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences. H. Keith Weeks, executive manager at Fox, presided. Emery Huse and J. Wesley Smith for Dupont, J. M. Nickolaus of M-G-M, L. E. Clark of Pathe and others spoke. Demonstration film was run by Cameramen Virgil Miller, Karl Struss and Ray June.

Columbia Production

Columbia is shooting one picture, "Miracle Woman," starring Barbara Stanwyck, with Frank Capra directing. Mae Clarke has been chosen for the lead in "Good Bad Girl," now preparing. Nine other pictures are in preparation. Shooting will begin soon.

Favors Novels

Howard Estabrook, who did the adaptation, continuity and dialogue on "Cimarron," for Radio, says that novels, when well written, offer the best material for the screen because of their story plots and the descriptions which help in adaptation. Hal Wallis, First National executive, adds to this by saying that "most ambitious young writers have all the flambuoyancy of Shakespeare" and urges "dynamic action, crisp dialogue and originality of plot."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre business was spotty during the current week, with few outstanding grosses being chalked up. The present week, figures for which will be published in the next issue of Motion Picture Herald, should see the end of the slightly depressed period due to Lent. There is little doubt but that the week of April 11 will show a decided trend upward in box office receipts, as was the case immediately following the Christmas holidays. Owing to better pictures and intensive advertising the theatres felt effect of Lent less this year then in 1930.

MUSIC AND TALENT

MUSIC WEEK IS NEAR FOR ARTISTS; SPECIAL SHOWS ON CIRCUIT BILLS

STAGE SHOWS

Chicago Oriental

Week ending April 2

"Bits of Broadway," a Will Harris production, is one of the fastest moving and genuinely entertaining Publix stage units to play the Oriental in months. The fast tempo of the presentation is achieved by eliminating secondary principals and their acts which, more often than not, are only time killers at best. Charlie Crafts, orchestra director and master of ceremonies, steps into the interludes thus created and succeeds in definitely contributing to the merit of the production, whereas he probably was expected to do no more than keep the show moving at the best pace possible.

The show opens with a Fifth avenue backdrop of crowded traffic lanes, and the chorus emerges from the front row of motors for a brief turn. Crafts comes on stage in a prop taxi, and his song of Broadway introduces a pageant of show girls. The Lambert Ballet follows on stage.

Tom Patricola and the Pearl Twins, hard working headliners of this production, appear for fast dance turns and some comedy bits in the second scene. They are sure fire to the Oriental's audience and finish with a friendly house behind them. Ann Roth, introduced by Crafts as a sister of Lillian Roth, follows with songs and is assisted by Crafts in good staging of several of them. Miss Roth's "Sing You Sinners" solo, given as an encore, proves to be the highlight of her act.

The Lambert Ballet and Crafts' orchestra fill in an interlude following Miss Roth's appearance and give way to a second turn by Patricola and the Pearl Twins. Some fast dances, Patricola alone, then the Pearl Twins together, interspersed with comedy, comprise the act's second appearance.

In the finale number Miss Roth leads the ballet in a fast and colorful "inferno" dance number, the girls in satanic costumes and the stage in an excellent flame lighting effect. Usual ensemble on stage for the curtain.

The merit of the two acts, Patricola's and Miss Roth's, together with the individual capabilities of Crafts, raises the production to a high level of entertainment. Its fast movement, as has been noted, is due to lack of crowding of the program with the elimination of mediocre performers which, on this bill, undoubtedly would have left the audience conscious of a letdown.

Ted Mack

This personable young chap has been master of ceremonies at the ace Paramount Publix house, the New York Paramount, for the last 17 weeks. He comes, originally, from the West Coast where, for the last four or five years, he was one of the favored sons. Ted didn't get the usual ballyhoo when he first came to New York but after a few weeks his pleasing personality and good showmanship had won every audience and before he realized it his fan mail had grown to tremendous proportions. Ted is also the originator and inventor of a new kind of megaphone. Ted conceived the idea of a megaphone through which his face could be seen and immediately went to work with a transparent substance and made it. He calls it the "transparaphone" and it really is an innovation over the old type of meg. Ted is also a feature on the "Paramount on Parade" hour over WABC and is becoming well known for his clever stunt, in which he is called the "Radio Newsreel Reporter." He is finishing up at the Paramount for the time being and is to be a feature in another "deluxer" of the circuit starting next week.

Organists and Stage Acts Can Assist Theatres in Increasing Attendance

By ED DAWSON

It devolves upon the artist of the console or the stage to plan exceptionally fine programs for the week May 2 to 9, which marks the national observance of Music Week.

This is the period when the organists and the stage artists can impress the theatre with their indispensibility as adjuncts to the picture program.

Good music brings a new audience to the theatre. This potential patronage can become regular once it is impressed with the entertainment value of the motion picture.

The big circuits are now preparing for Music Week through special programs and tieups. They see in these activities increased attendance—not temporary, but permanent.

On the shoulders of the artist lies much of the responsibility for making Music Week a success.

Vallee Back in Brooklyn

Rudy Vallee and His Connecticut Yankees, after an extended tour throughout the United States, are back at the Paramount, Brooklyn, in a specially produced "welcome home" show. Featured with Vallee is Hortense Ragland, a Southern society girl, whom Rudy discovered and is now introducing to Brooklyn as the newest singing star.

Played Juvenile, Fined

Philadelphia—George Ritch, manager of the State here, was fined $10 and costs for playing Davy Lee, juvenile. The case will be carried to appeal to test the Child Labor act.

Adding Stage Shows

Denver—Several houses in the southern part of the state are adding stage shows to film attractions, including two Fox theatres.

STAGE SHOWS

Boston Metropolitan

Week ending March 18

One of the most hilarious shows of the year, entitled "Down Came McGinty," was presented at the Met in this bill.

The show was staged by Boris Petroff, and included the clever Merriel Abbott Girls, who opened the show with a dance number. Their bright green costumes and tall green silk hats must have pleased old St. Pat, to say nothing of their good dancing.

Phil Arnold entertained with some double quick tap dancing that made us out of breath from just watching him. He sure could shake those feet. Then came a selection by Benny Meroff and the band in the form of a contest to see which member of the orchestra was the best player. The audience chose the drummer as the star, but when Benny asked the winner to stand up and take a bow the joke was on us as a member we hadn't even heard from responded.

Then the girls came back again in blue and orange costumes and did some acrobatic dancing to prove their versatility.

Wilton Crawley with his soprano sax did some tricky performing. He nearly turned himself inside out in some contortionist stunts and kept right on playing his saxophone at the same time. This got a great hand from the audience. They applauded his next stunt even more, when he danced, rolled over on the floor and twisted himself into all kinds of contortions, and yet managed to balance a kerosene lamp on top of his head all through it. After that he put his chin on the floor and took the lamp off his head with his feet and then placed it back on his head in the same way. The audience seemed to want him to stay on the whole evening by the way they applauded.

Sugar Marcel rendered some clever vocal selections, and then came a side-splitting pantomime act by Willie West and the McGinty family. It was a takeoff on carpenters building a house, and got one continual laugh from the audience from beginning to end. They worked so fast and each one did so many funny things that you had to keep your eyes peeled so as not to miss any of it.

After their act the entire company came on stage for the final curtain.

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending April 1

The third all-vaudeville stageshow since the first of the year holds forth this week at the Warfield, but scarcely comes up to the former offerings in point of merit. It is Fanchon & Marco's "Talent" Idea, but the talent seems to just fall short of headliner calibre, although some of the numbers are refreshingly pleasing.

Rube Wolf and His Musical Maniacs occupy a moveable platform on the stage and offer a vaudeville performance of their own, with novelties in instrumental music, songs, dances and stories. A trumpet trio is especially well received.

Rube introduces the Six Marinelli girls, gymnasts who perform feats expected only of men, climaxed by a ladder climbing stunt. Jeanne Carr does some nifty tap dancing and then brings on her mother, who offers some oldtime steps that please. Pa Carr also shows his nimble feet and the three then do an ensemble number. This act, not headlined, wins the applause honors of the show.

Harry Savoy offers a smooth line of patter, with a lot of stories that some people like, and gets able assistance from Maebehan, a good looking girl of the willowy type. George Wilson, who looks like Einstein and takes the role of a philosopher pianist, goes through with a lot of tomfoolery on a grand piano. He finally plays in a manner which reveals him as an accomplished musician. Adele Beers sings, to his accompaniment, but her efforts never reach the point of seriousness.

The concluding act is that of Gaynor & Byron, fancy roller skaters, who set a fast pace in a small space. They perform on a raised platform not much larger than a table, and go through thrilling stunts at top speed. Their offering is enjoyed by those who like the sensational.

Fox, RKO Houses Compete on Acts

San Francisco—Fox West Coast and RKO have engaged in a battle over stage presentations, with the Fox Warfield booking 10 acts after the RKO Golden Gate announced eight.

New York Capitol

Week ending April 3

The program this week opens with a unique type of overture for this orchestra. Yasha Bunchuk conducts the overture called "Harlem to Broadway." A colored quartette sings Negro spirituals and jazz as the orchestra accompanies them. Though this was different from this orchestra's usually fine type of overture, and though many of the audience seemed to like it, it did fall short.

The stageshow, "Let's Go Collegiate," produced by Chester Hale, proved to be a pleasing bit of entertainment, but no outstanding bits, except the final routine by the Chester Hale girls. Chester Fredericks, this unit's master of ceremonies, clowns around and does some very fine dancing throughout the show, proving himself to be the delight of most of the girls in the audience. The show opens to Fredericks leading the band as the Chester Hale girls do an "exercise" routine and are followed by a group, the Galenos, sensational acrobats who come in for the biggest share of applause in the show. The Chester Hale girls, in pastel shaded costumes, offer a simple but pleasing precision dance routine and are followed by Nina Olivette, a comedienne, who pleases with a comedy song and a loose-jointed comedy dance that gets her a good hand. Her dance with Fredericks also goes over well. Deszo Retter, international comedian, has the house in howls at his funny antics, especially when he does his routine of wrestling with himself. A precision routine, in which the girls used various colored lighted megaphones, closes the show.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending March 27

"Birds of a Feather," Publix revue, as a lead or follow to the film "Man of the World," played to excellent business.

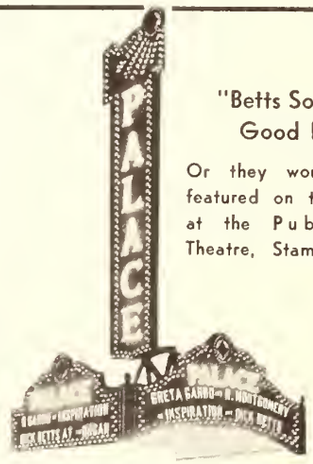
There are no headliners in this act, all the artists being on a common level, just betwixt and between as it were, but the honors go this time to the lowly chorus girls, billed here as Fred Evans' Ensemble of Gorgeous Girls in "Birds of Paradise"—and they are with no mistake, for, with gorgeous wardrobe, a change at each appearance, they are the bright spot in 30 minutes of pleasurable entertainment.

The Arnut Brothers, musicians and bird imitators, first as mandolin players in a comedy act, and later as two cookoos with bird talk, are pleasing in an act that leads to the grand finale a bird cage, a triumph in scenic art.

Stella Powers & Miriam Lax, young ladies in a high class vocal act pleased in an operatic program and received many hands, something unusual in these days of jazz, especially in the South.

The Four Carlton Brothers, dancers and what nots, in a series of quick-stepping hoofing, imitation foot ball movements and other jiggerarews, known years ago as "supper chasers," got away with it fairly well.

Lou Forbes, leader of the Saenger Grand Orchestra, is still going strong with repertoires of popular and classical selections. During the life of this pit orchestra, audiences have heard and witnessed the antics of many leaders, but Brother Forbes is one of the favorites, as for wiggling he has the original Fatima backed off the boards—but he is delivering the goods just the same.



Herbie, organist, presented a pretty feature, "My Cigarette Lady," with practical effects, a real he-man sitting before a fire place dreaming of a shapely she-woman, clad only in bridal veil in a hazy distance.

Eddie O'Rouke, master of ceremonies, sang. Business was exceptionally good.

"GOT THE BENCH, GOT THE PARK"—(Irving Berlin, Inc.)—One of the best novelty songs of the year. Great tune, great lyrics and looks commercial, too. Words and music by Fred Phillips, Al Sherman and Al Lewis.

"A PILLOW WET WITH TEARS"—(Villa Moret)—A lover thinks of his dear one even at bedtime. These writers have been quite successful in the past and this number looks as though it should sell. Words by George Waggner. Music by Neil Moret.

"MAMA INEZ"—(Edward B. Marks Music Company)—This firm who gave us the "Peanut Vendor" is getting back of this Cuban number. Of course with the furore created by the "Peanut Vendor" we can expect a lot of this type of numbers. Lyrics by L. Wolfe Gilbert. Music by Eliseo Grenet.

"THERE'S RHYTHM IN THE RIVER"—(Famous Music Corporation)—A spiritual that is well written both as to melody and lyrics. Is one of the best of this type of numbers and will no doubt be heard plenty. Music by John Jacob Loeb. Words by Paul Francis Webster.

"I HAVE TO LAUGH (WHEN I THINK HOW I DANCED WITH TEARS IN MY EYES OVER YOU)"—(De Sylva Brown & Henderson, Inc.)—The title is long enough to almost take up the entire chorus. Is a comedy travesty on the song that was recently a big hit. Has some clever lines and also a very good tune. Lyric by Jack McGowan. Music by Al Siegel.

"YOU'LL BE MINE IN APPLE BLOSSOM TIME"—(Joe Morris Music Company)—The firm that has been very successful with this type of song has another here that should develop into a good seller. Words by Charles Tobias. Music by Peter De Rose.

"I'M JUST A FOOL IN LOVE WITH YOU"—(Remick Music Corporation)—A strong lyric of one who loves even though he knows it's not reciprocated. A nice tune goes with same. By Sidney D. Mitchell, Archie Gottler and Geo. W. Meyer.

"WHEN THE MOON COMES OVER THE MOUNTAIN"—(Robbins Music Corporation)—Of the hill billy type this number has a great chance to be a good seller. It's as good as a lot of past numbers of this type. As a waltz ballad it sure has merit. Lyric by Howard Johnson. Music by Harry Woods.

"THE SONG OF THE HILLS"—(Leo Feist, Inc.)—A pretty story built around the hills. The melody too is quite appropriate. Looks commercial. Words and music by Al Jacobs, Chas. A. Haufe and Chester Cohn.

"GEORGIA ON MY MIND"—(Southern Music Publishing Company, Inc.)—A Southern song as the title plainly tells. Well written and with the proper plugging may develop. This firm just recently gave us "Rockin' Chair." Music by Hoagy Carmichael. Lyric by Stuart Gorrell.

"SOUS LES TOITS DE PARIS (UNDER A ROOF IN PARIS)"—(Harms, Inc.)—Written as the theme song for a foreign picture. A beautiful waltz with both American and French lyrics. Words by René Nazelles. English Version by Irving Caesar. Music by Raoul Moretti.

Frank Magine and Walter Hirsch, popular song writers, appeared in person at the Davis store, singing and playing their latest songs. . . . Jan Garber and orchestra are doing a great job in their new location, Congress Hotel. . . . Louis Panico's NBC time has been changed from Thursday to Monday evening. . . . Vern Buck and his band, now playing at the Drake hotel, is another good NBC bet. . . . Jesse Stool, brother of Joey Stool, manager of De Sylva, Brown & Henderson's Chicago office, is learning the music business from the bottom up, and if he is anything like his brother he should be a successful music man, for that Stool personality is dominating at all times. . . . The Remick Music Corporation will give up their headquarters in the State & Lake building soon, to take over their new office in the Woods theatre building. . . . Herbie Mintz and orchestra are now playing at the Southmoor hotel.

A. W. (Sen) Kaney, that veteran of announcers who was recently named program manager for the Chicago division of NBC, has decided that he will stick to radio rather than go in for the movies. Sen worked in a short sequence shot in multi-color at studio A, the world's largest radio studio, the other day and found that it involved more than three hours work in getting but little more than 30 seconds of moving pictures. . . . The Wanderers Quartette, one of the best known male quartettes in radio heard over station WGN, have been together less than a year. In that short space of time they have built up one of the most enviable records in radio. They have been featured on several of the most important Chicago NBC programs, including the Florsheim Frolic and the Maytag Program, and have also made extended tours on the stage and in special performances. . . . Chick Castle is now connected with the Ollman Music company. Chick is a great little fellow but has played in tough luck, but we all feel that if he gets a decent break he will prove himself to be one of the best little music men in the business. Best wishes, Chick. . . . Talent that first manifested itself in a 4-year-old boy who followed organ grinders on the streets of Chicago, is heard almost daily on programs over a nation wide network, while Harry Kogen, native of Chicago, and master of the violin, directs his band before the microphones of the NBC.

Herr Louie and the Weasel, that inimitable comedy team heard each night over station WGN, are having much ado these nights about the "Sweet Tooth Peanut and Candy Corporation." The Weasel has become a salesman for this firm but thus far he's been having a cracking good time trying to get the peanuts to open noiselessly. "It's really a great invention," said Hal Gilles, alias the Weasel, "Just think of being able to attend the Chicago Civic Opera with a bag of peanuts and munch them without attracting attention. Since Columbus discovered America there hasn't been anything that demands the attention of civilization as does these noiseless peanuts. . . . Del Owens, director of programs for WGN, is a composer of note. When you hear a peppy theme song for a commercial program for this station, two to one Del has written it. To his prolific pen is credited the music for many musical comedies.

ORGAN SOLOS

ADA RIVES (Loew's State, New Orleans) scores a decided success with "Let's Do Imitations," her organ solo. Opening with a request for the audience to help her with imitations of famous stage stars, she renders "You Brought a New Kind of Love to Me" and asks the audience to imitate Maurice Chevalier with her. Next comes "Give Me Something to Remember You By," featuring a Rudy Vallee imitation and a number of laughs. Follows "Helen Kane" in "You're Driving Me Crazy," and a closing number, "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver." This is the third week of Miss Rives' solos, Loew's State having brought back the organ spot when it assumed a presentation policy instead of vaude-film.

STANLEY PINHERO (Newark, N. J., RKO Proctor's) took advantage of spring by giving his audience advice on "A Spring Sing Tonic," which incorporated by clever word slides and oral talk the beneficial effects of singing if used as a tonic. He used the following songs: "99 Out of a 100," "Baby Just Cares," "Reaching for the Moon," "April Showers" and "Just a Gigolo." A smart solo, everyone sang and apparently (by the tremendous applause at the finish) everyone enjoyed Pinhero's efforts.

WESLEY LORD (Omaha Paramount) plays the role of a doctor who prescribes pills to cure ills. His is the song treatment for curing the flu patient. Lines projected upon the screen which the audience is invited to follow in song include such as these: "The world is full of ills for which they give us pills." The screen background is a futuristic study in colors, long triangular shapes. One of the first melodies is "Something to Remember You By." Lord wears a physician's surgical coat. When at first the audience does not do much singing there are words projected upon the screen: "There was very little singing so you see I'm right about the colds."

He suggests that the audience try his little piece called "K-Chooo," in which most of the house sneezes and then follows the lines of the group singing. Other lines which follow include "Don't fool with Aspirin, Gordon Gin or Bromo Quinine"—"Don't mind the cough, just sing it off." Suggested remedies in the lines are "Whoopee for whooping cough, Anchors for floating kidneys, Tiffany setting for ring worms." "You're Driving Me Crazy" and "Sonny Boy" are tunes heard in the medley accompaniment.

HAL FRIEDMAN (Dorchester, Mass., Publix Morton) has an interesting and novel organlogue, this week, which is entitled "Let's Go Gangster." Specially written gag slides to the effect that everyone has a racket introduced the solo. This was followed by the scram song, "Would You Like to Take a Walk," and a parody on "Just a Gigolo," written with special lyrics which started out with "Just a Racketeer." The balance of the program consisted of the singing of "King's Horses," "Tears," "You're the One I Care For," and a final chorus of "99 Out of a 100." Hal has just returned from a "guest" trip in other Publix houses in the Boston district and the way the audience greeted him proves that he is a big favorite at the house.

HENRIETTA KAMERN (New York Loew's 175) presented a clever novelty called "The Social Club," which carried as its theme the idea of getting together and singing. It was effectively worded and all the audience joined in singing these songs: "Lady, Play Your Mandolin," "On Account of Your Kisses," "Tears," "One Little Raindrop," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and closed with a medley of oldtimers, starting with "Good Night Ladies." Audience reaction to this solo was very good and Miss Kamern received a gratifying reception for her efforts.

JACK WARD (Brooklyn Fox Carroll) the singing organist, orally introduced each of the numbers in his program before playing them. There was no title to this novelty, other than an introduction of Ward and then the singing by the audience of the following songs: "When You Fall in Love," "Got the Bench," "All On Account of Your Kisses," "We Can Live on Love," "Cryin' Myself to Sleep," "Smile, Darn Ya Smile" and a closing special about a local contest. Ward plays a good organ and as he has found that this local audience wants to sing only and not listen to a lot of chatter, and so on, he is making himself very popular by giving them this type of community singing.

IRIS WILKINS (Wisconsin theatre Milwaukee) offers "The Face on the Drug Store Floor." Introductory words to the solo are sung to the melody of "On the Road to Mandalay." Included in the painting of the picture of the fair young maiden are the hits "Blue Again," for the eyes; "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver," for the hair; "And Then Your Lips Met Mine," for the lips and "Cheerful Little Earful" for the ears. The presentation closes with "You're Nobody's Sweetheart Now." Miss Wilkins sings the numbers the words to which are flashed on the screen.

EARL ABEL (Texas, San Antonio) offered as his organ solo late song hits: Three Little Words," "Go Home and Tell Your Mother," "I'm Alone Because I Love You" and "You're the One."

On the first two, Abel had to coax them along to get 'em started, but once under way they sang long and loud.

Earl also put on a slide to the strains of "Swanee River," that helped to make the audience mimic the old time singers. The organist also got in a tongue-twisting song-slide that made the patrons pay close attention to the screen in order to sing just what was on the slides.

YOUR PUBLIC

by
RITA C. McGOLDRICK

A MONTH ago we emphasized in this department the importance of the "thematic" program—a program that suitably commemorates a national holiday, an historic birthday or event, or a civic celebration. In the past few years forward looking theatre managers have found pictures appropriate to the occasion a most valuable box office attraction largely because of their advertising possibilities and for the opportunities they afford for original lobby displays.

In last week's MOTION PICTURE HERALD there was a strong article on "100% Community Representation Needed for Success of Theatre" which analyzed the need of local showmen and presented an outline which Paramount Publix theatre men have been ordered to study. First on the list of suggestions was the following:

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

"1. Local holidays and occasions . . . the date, spirit and extent of the celebration; facts which will hamper theatre attendance; facts which can be used to increase theatre attendance."

Another paragraph suggests: "Clubs and Societies, purpose, type of membership, character of activities, meeting days (include Chamber of Commerce, Rotary, commercial, civic, fraternal and social organizations, American Legion, Boy Scouts, camera clubs, dramatic societies, etc.)."

And finally, the following important inquiry: "What is to be done to develop children's patronage, since children are the patrons of tomorrow? What are the possibilities of children's matinees; Saturday morning matinees; children's souvenir performances and Kiddie Clubs?"

These pertinent questions mesh with identical precision into the aims, possibilities and thoughts for community cooperation with the theatre which this department has stressed and with which we are particularly concerned. When theatre managers and public are so strongly agreed upon the same essential points then there is bound to be a leaping momentum in local patronage of motion pictures.

April Suitability

Early April, with the closing of Lent and the religious festical of Easter, is the time for dignified programs and for the avoidance of the blatantly sophisticated picture with lurid captions that would unintentionally strike a jarring note to that element in your community whose good will you are anxious to retain. These are the days for a revival of "The King of Kings," for Pathe's short features on jaunts through the Holy Land; for garden and flower subjects and for dignified music. "The Magic Garden," an RKO feature of seven reels, would also be appropriate, with any of the following shorts:

"Birds of a Feather" (Silly Symphony), Columbia, 1 reel.

"King of Bugs" (Fable), Pathe, 1 reel.

"Blossoms" (Spring), RKO Pathe Review No. 20, 1929.

"Bre'r Rabbit and His Pals" (Pathe), 1 reel.

Saturday, April 11.

Peary Reached the North Pole (April 6, 1909).

Invite school and church officials and members of historical or geographic societies as guests of honor.

Features:

"Nanook of the North," Pathe, 6 reels.
"With Byrd at the South Pole," Paramount, 7,593 feet.
"At the Bottom of the World" (South Pole), Talking Picture Epic, 3,300 feet.

Shorts:

"Arctic Antics" (Silly Symphony), Columbia, 1 reel.
"Explorer" (cartoon), Educ., 1 reel.

Saturday, April 11, is also in Garden Week.

Invite as guests of honor: Members of Garden Clubs, Teachers of Agriculture of the public schools, horticulturists and a representative member of Chamber of Commerce. Children might be invited to submit garden sketches, members of Garden Club to act as judges and make awards. Free packets of flower and garden seeds may be obtained from Department of Agriculture in Washington, D. C. Garden week offers excellent opportunities for art store, florist and library cooperation.

Upon careful check up with the exchanges we find that there is no suitable feature picture available for this year's Garden week, but that there are any number of attractive short subjects:

"Enchanted Forest," Tiffany, 1 reel.
"King of Bugs" (Fable), Pathe, 1 reel.
"Mickey's Warriors" (comedy — garden party), RKO, 2 reels.
"Springtime" (Silly Symphony), Columbia, 1 reel.
"Playful Pan" (Silly Symphony), Columbia, 1 reel. (The year's best cartoon.)

Saturday, April 18.

Be Kind to Animals Week.

Guest of honor: Officers of Humane Society and school officials.

The promotion of a Pet contest, with suitable awards would be an amusing attraction likely to cause a good deal of local attention and newspaper publicity.

Features:

"Land of the Silver Fox" (Rin Tin Tin), Warner, 5,200 feet.
"Million Dollar Collar" (Rin Tin Tin), Warner, 5 and 6 reels.
"On the Border" (Rin Tin Tin), Warner, Warner, 4,410 feet.

Shorts:

"Barefoot Days," Warner, 1 reel.
"Dogs of Solitude" (St. Bernard Dogs), Vagabond Series, Pathe, 1 reel. An excellent and interesting feature.
"Big Dog House" (dog comedy), M-G-M, 2 reels.
"Birds of a Feather" (Silly Symphony), Columbia, 1 reel.
"Like a Beaver" (Beaver Life), Talking Picture Epics.
"So Quiet on the Canine Front" (Dog Comedy), M-G-M, 2 reels.

Saturday, April 18.

Is also American Forest Week.

It was designated as such by President Coolidge in order that interest might be aroused in the forestry problems of the nation. From a long list of announced films suitable for forestry week only one short is available: "Tree Saps," Paramount, 1 reel.

Saturday, April 25.

Opens Boys' Week.

It is aimed to arouse the consciousness of manhood toward boyhood; also to call attention in every possible way to the agencies which are operating to help boys to work toward the higher aims in life. Boys' Week offers theatre men an exceptional opportunity to win community interest and appreciation and should be featured in an especial manner.

Guests of Honor: Boy Scout Executives; School executives; Y. M. C. A.; Committee on Boys' Promotion and Welfare; Camp and club directors. Have a father and son night. Ask Boy Scouts to be ushers; invite book stores and libraries to feature books of special interest to boys. Banners for your marquee and special lighting effects should announce the occasion.

Features:

"Tom Sawyer" (mischievous boy), Paramount, 7,972 feet.
"Skippy," Paramount (excellent—the best Juvenile picture of many years). nile picture of many years).
"Connecticut Yankee" (with Will Rogers and Maureen O'Sullivan), Fox.

Shorts:

"Barefoot Days," Warner, 1 reel.
"Brats" (Laurel and Hardy), M-G-M, 2 reels.
"Self Defense" (Sportlight), Pathe, 1 reel. Almost any of the Grantland Rice Sportlights available are suitable.

Ulysses S. Grant (birthday April 27, 1822-1885), a Union general and 18th president of the United States.

Guests: Civil War veterans, in uniform, if possible. United Daughters of Confederacy; officers of any patriotic organization. Display Civil War flags, guns, relics, etc.

Features:

"Fighting Caravans," Paramount, 8,566 feet.

"Our Presidents," 1930 Pathe Review No. 36, 1 reel.

(The above named pictures have all been checked with the exchanges and are all available.)

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 71

By F. H. RICHARDSON

THE question was: (A) Describe the slit optical system and tell us exactly what the condition must be at each point or element along the system if the best results are to be had. (B) Name the requisites for perfect results, insofar as has to do with the exciting lamp and its optical system.

First of all, I want to give some of you chaps a bit of a jacketing up. Each week there are anywhere from 50 to 200 replies come in too late to receive consideration. If men away out in British Columbia are able to get their answers in on time, certainly the rest of you ought to be able to do it without much trouble. Pep up and get a trifle more busy.

The following have presented acceptable answers to this question. Earl Boyer, Lester Borst, C. Rau and S. Evans, Leslie Yates, Thomas Peters, George Thompson, W. B. True, G. E. Doe, John Kotarch, John Williams, Carl Daugherty, John Doe, Tom Turk, J. C. Hamlin, R. B. Whitnah, R. P. Franklin, Claud Addington, Andy Richards, Frank Mitchel, James McGuire, G. T. Baldy, Thomas Van Vaulkenburg, Harry Crowley, S. Kleine, Frank S. Cimms, Robert Dodson, Frank T. Jenkins, G. Stapleton, A. R. Reisman, D. L. Herbert, D. Marsh, Wm. Gibson, George L. Walker, D. L. MacArthur, Lewis Henderson and T. L. Woods.

And now, gentlemen, I am faced with a queer proposition. To this question many have returned excellent answers, particularly Earl Boyer, Lester Borst, John Williams, Robert Dodson, Leslie Yates and G. Stapleton. However, again there is not one of them which, from the publication viewpoint, shows up as well as does the reply of C. Rau and S. Evans, Victoria, B. C.

The trouble lies here. I have recently published several of the answers of these two gentlemen, and since naturally each man likes to see his answer published, publishing too many of the answers of one person (in this case really two, but combined into one answer) may discourage others from sending in answers.

Well, gentlemen, that is unfortunate, but I cannot do otherwise than select for publication the answer which seems, everything considered, best. That does not mean, however, that the answers of the men named in the list are not just as correct, as far as they go. Most of them don't go so far as do Rau and Evans, however, or else do not work it into such excellent form. So all I can say is, won't you work just a bit harder to make your answers a bit more complete, and to put them into the very best possible form? Rau and Evans answer follows:

"(A)—The name 'slit optical system' is applies to the condensing and objective lenses which are mounted in the brass barrel containing the mechanical slit.

"The condenser consists of two plano-convex lenses (five-eighths of an inch in diameter in Western Electric and one inch in diameter in RCA installations), which are mounted apex to apex, so as to collect the light from the exciting lamp and converge the rays on the mechanical slit.

"The slit is an aperture (in Western Electric, 1½ thousandths high by 3/16 inch wide; in RCA, .006 of an inch high by .51 of an inch wide), placed in a horizontal position in the barrel, through which the light from the condenser passes in the form of a thin line.

"This beam of light falls upon an objective lens, which further reduces the size of the beam (the intensity of this beam, however, is increased), so that when it reaches the film the beam is .001 of an inch high by .08 of an inch wide (in books put out by RCA, the corporation claims that the dimensions of the beam after it passes through the reduction lens should not be more than .00075 of an inch high by exactly .07 of an inch wide).

"To get the best results from the 'slit optical system' (granting that the exciting lamp, film and photo-electric cells are in good condition and adjustment) the condenser surfaces must be clean and polished; the slit must be clean and in an absolutely horizontal position as regards the lines on the sound track of variable density on the film. That is, supposing a line to be running down the exact center of the sound track, the slit will be at right angles to this line. The surfaces of the lenses of the objective or reducing lens must be kept clean and polished. The projectionist is concerned only with the outer surfaces of the objective lens, as he is forbidden to disturb the seal made by the engineers on the assembly. The light from the objective lens must be focused sharply at the sound track of the film. In the case of Western Electric and RCA installations this is done by the service engineer, but the projectionist must know how to do it in case he is called upon to take charge of other installations which are not serviced.

"One method of focusing the light from the objective lens on the film is to thread a piece of high frequency (about 8,000 cycles) film from the lower sprocket in the projector head to the constant speed or takeup sprocket in the sound head, closing the sound gate leaving the usual loop above it. Next, place a white card or paper to cover the opening to the photoelectric cell housing. Then, with the exciting lamp turned on, with the finger slowly pull the film down past the sound gate aperture, meanwhile watching the image of the sound track which is reproduced on the card. The lines of the sound track are greatly magnified on the white card. Should the lines be moving either up or down, as the film is pulled down, the image of the slit is not properly focused on the film. When properly focused, the lines seem to dissolve into one another at the center. When focusing, the entire assembly in the barrel is moved backwards or forwards until the correct position is reached, at which position it is clamped in place by a set-screw.

"(B)—Perfect results as regards the exciting lamp and its optical system may be obtained by having the lamp in good condition and adjusted correctly so that a maximum of its light will fall on the slit. A lamp that shows signs of blackening on its interior surface should be discarded, as this blackening will mean a loss of light. The filament of the lamp should be absolutely straight, with no signs of sagging. If the filament shows signs of sagging it means that the slit will not be entirely covered with an even illumination; therefore the volume and quality of the reproduced sound will suffer. The lamp must be adjusted so that its most intense light will fall upon the entire area of the slit.

"In RCA equipments, this is done by placing a card at the opening to the photoelectric cell housing, turning on the exciting lamp, and adjusting the lamp, either up or down, until a clear white field in the form of a spot is shown on the card. This vertical adjustment is the only one necessary in RCA as the other adjustments are taken care of by the way the exciting lamp sockets are mounted. The RCA exciting lamps are usually three in number, mounted on a turret, so that the spares may be quickly brought into action by merely turning the turret. However, in the latest small RCA types, only one lamp, mounted in a bracket similar to the Western Electric form, is used, with an extra bracket containing a lamp previously adjusted, ready as a spare.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 77 — Are horns directional? What is the limit of sound distribution of horns? Explain, in your own way, just what might be the effects of wrong horn positioning in a wide auditorium. Should the theatre manager or projectionist believe the horn positioning might be improved, what is the proper procedure if the theatre be sound serviced? If it be not so serviced?

"In Western Electric equipment, one lamp is used in the sound head, and another lamp, previously adjusted in its bracket, is on hand as spare. If the lamp in the projector goes bad, the spare bracket may be installed in a very short time.

"To adjust the lamp, first place a white card in front of the sound gate aperture on which card will be seen a white spot which must be free from shadows and in sharp focus when the lamp is adjusted in its correct position.

"The lamp should be clamped in its socket so that the filament is parallel with the slit which is in a horizontal plane. If there are shadows at the top, bottom or side of the spot on the card, the clamping screws of the vertical and sidewise adjustments must be loosened and the lamp moved to the position where the spot is free of shadows, whereupon the clamping screws are tightened. The exciting lamp must now be focused. This is done by loosening the clamping screw, and then carefully turning the adjusting screw until the sharpest possible focus is obtained at the spot on the card."

New Lens Turret

THE International Projector Corporation is out with a Simplex improvement—a lens turret, concerning which that corporation is doing a lot of talking. Well, that's quite all right, for it really is a most excellent and welcome accessory. And now I will try and tell you exactly what it is.

First of all, it may be applied to all models of Simplex projector, so if you have one with more or less gray whiskers, or the whiskers would be gray if projectors that old had any, still you may attach the new turret, and bring it that much up to date.

The turret carries, or will carry, three projection lenses. One will of course be the regular silent film lens. The second may be a lens of sufficiently short focal length to cause the sound-on-the-film screen image to just fill the silent picture screen when an aperture mask of suitable proportions has been slipped into place. The third lens may be a "Magniscope." With this assembly the projectionist has only to rotate the turret one-third around to bring the next lens into position, which same may be done in the fraction of a second.

If neither silent nor sound-on-disc is used, or if magniscope is not used, then the idle opening may be fitted with a lens suitable for some other effect it may be desired to project.

The device does not necessitate the removal of any of the fire prevention devices, hence the fire prevention properties of projectors equipped with the turret are in no way impaired. The turret is so mounted that it rotates freely, though rigidly supported and entirely free from all vibration. There is a stop and suitable lock to hold the turret in the position desired. The change from one lens to another is accomplished by moving a small lever which releases the lock, and rotating the turret in the desired direction. When the new position is arrived at the lock automatically snaps into position.

With the turret a new film protector and gate latch assembly are supplied, which obviates the necessity for the projectionist placing his hand inside the mechanism to close the gate when threading. An arrangement of three mirrors is provided in the rear end of the turret, by means of which the aperture may be observed, in order to check up and make sure the framing of the picture is correct after the film is in place over the aperture.

The new turret has been so designed that it may be very easily attached to Simplex projector mechanisms of any model. This may be done without cutting away any part of the mechanism. Installation may be attended to by the projectionist himself. He has only to carefully follow the excellent installation instructions which will accompany each turret. The openings are made to accommodate "half size" lenses, but suitable adapters will be supplied for lenses of smaller diameters. The turret is well designed and handsome in appearance. It may be used on Simplex equipped with either front or rear rotating shutter.

New Blood Needed?

RECENTLY in conversation with a prominent projectionist of New York City a matter came up which set your editor's think works going. Said this projectionist, who is a man of long experience in the profession and quite prominent in its councils: "We are beginning to very badly need new blood in projection."

Now I am least unwilling to pronounce that statement untrue. In fact, I am not at all certain but that it is based upon a solid foundation of fact. Until a relatively few years ago the motion picture industry was constantly growing. The number of theatres was increasing, thus new men were being brought into projection in large numbers.

Today all that is changed. Existing theatres are tending to reduce rather than enlarge their projection force. The number of theatres also is decreasing. Instead of men being brought into projection they are now being dropped, and in considerable numbers, too.

The projectionist of today finds himself rather well paid, when both the year-round steadiness of the work and the further fact that it is in many ways light, rather pleasant work is considered.

This, of course, means that not many men are dropping out voluntarily, and those who do find their places quickly filled by others who have been forced out.

Not only does this situation pretty thoroughly bar new blood for a time at least, but, due to the thorough organization of nearly all our cities, it is practically impossible for a new man to break into the city field until or unless an old man drops out by death or otherwise.

Your editor does not feel disposed to comment much upon this situation at this time. It is merely briefly set before you, with the suggestion that, while this is perhaps inevitable, still in such work as projection it seems to make for a rather bad situation.

New men entering the field of human endeavor have, for a considerable time at least, a rather keen interest in that field. They are "new brooms" and rather like to raise a dust. The very fact that new blood may offer serious competition has a decided tendency to keep the older men a bit on their toes, and anything which does that is beneficial.

On the other hand, when men already in the business or profession for a considerable time are made, through the strength of organization or otherwise, to feel that their position is unassailable, they, in the very nature of things, are inclined to more or less lose that keen interest which is so necessary to excellence in any line of work. The business or profession is an old story to them. Its duties have become more or less monotonous and humdrum. They are inclined to and usually do settle down into a rut. The easiest way is to let things slide along, and that usually is just about what they proceed to do.

I do not care to discuss this matter further at this time. I do believe, however, that since the time now is here when new blood can only enter in proportion as the old drops out, the unions which are to a considerable extent responsible for the condition, owe it to the motion picture industry, to the exhibitor and to projection as a profession, to find and apply some effective means for keeping interest in projection alive and keen. We will duscuss this particular problem more at length later.

104 A.C. Units Installed by RCA

RCA Photophone reports 104 complete A. C. sound units contracted for by exhibitors here and abroad.

Of the number, 61 were domestic and 43 foreign. Of the latter, 26 were in England and 17 divided among houses in Chile, Argentina, the Philippines, India, Venezuela and South Africa.

Erpi Staff Covered 5,000 Miles by Airplane in 1930

Service engineers of Erpi covered 5,000 miles by airplane in 1930 in response to 21 emergency calls, according to H. M. Wilcox, operations head.

He also reported that service calls have decreased 90% since December, 1928. The greatest demand for plane use is in the West, where train service is limited.

Fox Accessory Sales Set Company's Weekly Record

Accessory sales of Fox for the week ending March 28, exceeded any previous week in the company's history, officials reported.

Lee D. Balsley, sales head, saw the report as indicative of renewal of optimism by exhibitors.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

FROM JANUARY 25 to MARCH 14, showing every night, I have only got by on six pictures: "Check and Double Check" (RKO), "All Quiet" (U.), "Africa Speaks" (Col.), "Half Shot At Sunrise" (RKO), "Our Blushing Brides" (M-G-M), "Safety In Numbers" (Para.). The first four are especially worth running in any man's house.

"Tol'able David" (Col.), "The Lash" (F.N.), "King of Jazz" (U.), "Byrd at the South Pole" (Para.), "Caught Short" (M-G-M), "Desert Vengeance" (Col.), "Love Among Millionaires" (Para), and "Trigger Tricks" (Col.) could not make the grade, and are all good pictures. "The Lash" is not so slow as critics report it. Do not be afraid of it. Put it on your best nights. "Outside the Law" (U.) is not much, just fair.

"The Girl Said No" (M-G-M), "Seven Days Leave" (Para.), "Divorcee" (M-G-M), and "Laughing Lady" (Para.), gave us a terrible set back, yet the last two pictures are fine in their class.

The producers when they charge prices so that I can't make a dime on their average product are merely asking me to give them a dole—they are so hard up from the "big slump" I presume. How fortunate it is that I am a Croesus!

Well! It's small town fellows such as I who have contributed "till it hurts" for those Hollywood actors' palaces. Such is the motion picture racket!

I just ran "Common Clay" (Fox), and I believe it is the best picture we have had in a long, long time. While it made no money it is very satisfying and you will do well to run it. It is a "Madam X" type of play and of absorbing interest. There is nothing objectionable about it.—PHILIP RAND, Rex Theatre, Salmon Idaho.

Thanks for the Congrats!

NOTICED YOU HAVE INSERTED A complete release chart in the HERALD issue of March 21.

I wish to congratulate you on this move, if it is only to appear once a month.

At the Allied convention in Chicago, a number of exhibitors stated they sure missed the release chart in the HERALD.

I trust the release chart increases your subscriptions.—J. R. MCKINLAY, Grand Theatre Company, International Falls, Minn.

Misses Music Survey

I NOTICE WITH REGRET THAT THE MOTION PICTURE HERALD has discontinued the weekly survey of popular music. This was an invaluable help to orchestra leaders and organists and I used it as a handy guide to feel the pulse of the public's response to popular numbers; both radio and "platters" being inadequate.

I hope that the discontinuance of the survey is only temporary and the department will be restored. I subscribe to your publication.—EGAN M. DOUGHERTY, Organist Loew's Triboro theatre, Astoria, Long Island.

UP UNTIL THE LAST FEW WEEKS you used to publish under the music section of your magazine a list of "Broadway Best Sellers."

I've certainly missed this list lately as it is indeed itself worth the price of a year's subscription to me.

Here's hoping you will reinstate same to good standing again.—JAMES MOFFITT, Auditorium theatre, Tampa, Kan.

Ditto for Zim Zim

WE REGRET VERY MUCH THAT YOUR music department does not contain is former list of the week's best sellers of sheet music.

May we have this valuable service restored or retained from your EXHIBITORS HERALD Publication. We are missing it very much in our theatre.—M. W. ZIMMERMANN, Zim Zim theatre, Cumberland, Wis.

Needs Music Lists, Too

I REGRET VERY MUCH THAT YOU have discontinued publishing a list of best sellers in popular sheet music. I am in the sheet music business and rely very largely on these lists which I have always found to be exceedingly reliable.—CLINT MCDADE, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Two to Five

Hollywood (QP)—"It is not necessary to take a scene in talkies as many times as in silent; the distinction between a good and a bad performance is more sharply drawn in dialogue pictures." These are the opinions of Cecil B. DeMille.

Cecil B. DeMille

"In silent pictures," states DeMille, "I was accustomed to take at least five shots of each scene, and oftimes upwards of a dozen of the same scene. In my current talkie 'The Squawman,' two takes were enough.

"The difference is that you can tell pretty closely from the dialogue whether the scene will be good. In silent, pantomimic pictures, without the yardstick of dialogue, one could not make final judgment of worth on a set. One could never know how a certain bit of pantomine would get over until you saw it on the screen.

"Therefore, we shot very many more added takes than is customary in the talking picture medium."

1,270 Film Theatres In Japan; Increase 40 Yearly Since '96

Tokio—Picture theatres have increased in Japan at the rate of 40 a year since 1896, when films were introduced into that country, until today there are 1,270 theatres. These figures are brought out by a survey of Yoshiyuki Mizuno, of the Osaka Mainichi.

In Tokyo and Osaka, there are over 10 film theatres with sound. Five of these have Western Electric equipment.

"In addition to this rapid commercial development, the cinema has necessarily influenced national thought and the habits of the people," Mizuno declares. "Motion pictures have, in fact, become one of the important elements in Japanese civilization."

Recently, 718 films have been produced in Japan, all of which were released. Most of the foreign product shown is imported from the United States.

Mascot Sells 7 Franchises on Serials

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Pass the Sulphur and Molasses!

'TIS spring! And of course, according to Hoyle, one must soliloquize (good word that) when spring rolls around.

So, while soliloquizing, we must admit that this has been one tough winter for a lot of the boys, but since it's proper to become more optimistic in the spring than at other times, we'll wax optimistic and say that the future ought to be a darned sight more pleasant than the past.

* * * *

More Club members changed their address this past winter than in the two previous winters of the Club's existence. That's a positive barometer that more switching was done than ever before.

* * * *

More district managers made monkeys of themselves than ever before, because there are more district managers than ever before. In fact, some of them found anywhere from a dozen to a hundred new ways to annoy good house managers and showmen. Seems like those d.m.'s lay awake nights thinking up how to be better supervisors, the only trouble is that they "soup" a little too much when they might be helping the boys on the firing line.

* * * *

With the Club office located high up overlooking Central Park, it's going to be a battle of mind over matter to keep from playing hookey so as to go romping (?) in the park. Stop in whenever you are in the neighborhood boys and take a look at the view from our windows. You will have to admit that to be able to keep your mind on work requires much will-power.

* * * *

If we ever start a box score of circuits making the most managerial changes we'll bet you can guess which one would head the list. And talking about these changes reminds us of that now famous expression, "Don't worry about your jobs boys, we don't contemplate any changes." You've all heard that line at least six times in the past twelve months. And you also know that it was really a lot of baloney. As witness the wholesale changes which do take place about ten days after the famous speech is made.

* * * *

And then they will talk about the need of manpower in showbusiness. Well, we would hate to enumerate the many fine showmen who have cut loose from this racket in disgust to find new fields for their ability. You can't blame them after the runaround they were getting from, so-called, supervisors and home office executives. Some day, some one,—(Lord bless whoever it will be)—will make the startling discovery that a good organization requires good manpower. And that manpower must be made up of real showmen and not doormen or rubber stamps. And that the penny-wise-pound-foolish plan never can apply to running a theatre. If a house is worth an investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars then it's worth a salary of decent proportions for the man who looks after that investment. A fact recognized in most every business except theatre circuits.

* * * *

Here's hoping some of those wealthy theatre-owners will take an extra large dose of sulphur and molasses; perhaps it will restrain them from cutting the managers' salary this summer and even make them generous enough to give the boys a little much-needed vacation. Miracles DO happen, however rarely it may be.

Lawter Sends Out A Personal Letter To Plug Coming Shows

Each week, A. H. Lawter, manager of the Egyptian Theatre, De Kalb, Ill., sends out a personal letter through his mailing list. It has been found by him to be of great value in apprising the local public of the shows.

The letter is mimeographed, and written in a nice, easy style. Lawter discusses both the stars and their vehicles. The letters are looked forward to with interest by the various patrons of the house. Incidentally, Lawter has another angle that goes over great in his town.

Each week a special, autographed photo is given away at the theatre. The photos, all of the one star appearing in the big picture of the week, are bought by a local restaurant, that also pays for the printing, that is placed on the back of the photo. The photo is in a form of rotogravure. To stimulate interest in the stunt, the back of the photo also carries a number. A box informs holders of the photo that those possessing a photo with a number corresponding to one on a bulletin in the theatre lobby or a board in the restaurant are entitled to free tickets.

Oke, A. H. we are glad to see that you are doing lots of business boosting. Keep it up and let's hear from you again in the near future.

Bowman's Campaign On "Min and Bill" Was A Laugh-Getter

When "America's New Sweethearts"—as Marc Bowman, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Portland, Ore., styled Wallace Beery and Marie Dressler when they appeared in "Min and Bill" at the theatre got together, there was sure to be fireworks. Bowman showed this to be true by the unique lobby display that he showed a week in advance of the picture.

We are showing a photo of this lobby display, which, as you will notice, consisted of a large display case, headed by a card: "Min and Bill's Museum of Art." "Min and Bill," or Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery, are now known as "America's New Sweethearts." The displays contained stills and exhibits. A card would read: "Min's Preferred Weapon of Love—As Bill Knew It," and would show a revolver, backed by a still of Marie Dressler and Beery in characteristic pose. Another card stated: "Min Wooed Bill with a Razor—Ah, Verily, Theirs Was not a Dull Love Affair" (a razor was on display). Another card was flanked by a still showing Min, axe in hand, prepared to break down Bill's resistance by splintering a door behind which Bill has fled for refuge.

We would like to hear some more about Mr. Bowman's work, and we hope that he will pass it along to us. What do you say, Marc? Can we expect to hear from you soon?

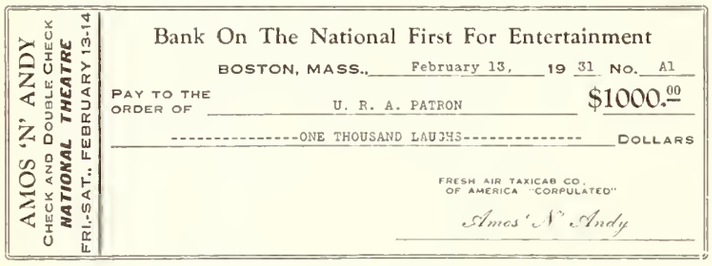
"I Knew Him When - - -!"

Maybe you did, if so, you'll enjoy reading about it at this late date.



With this week's issue we have inaugurated a new feature dealing with showmen happenings of Fifteen Years Ago. Besides reading about some of the old timers you will be surprised to learn how old some of the supposedly new ideas of today really are.

Follow the story of "Showmanship, Fifteen Years Ago," and see if you don't find it mighty interesting.

Herald Novelty Used By Richmond Clicked For Excellent Biz

An idea that clicked very well for him and created a lot of talk around the vicinity of the National Theatre, Boston Mass., was the gag used by Louis W. Richmond when he played Amos 'N' Andy in "Check and Double Check."

The checks, as shown in the cut, were made up in regulation style being printed on the usual check paper stock. The check entitled the bearer to 1,000 laughs when witnessing the blackface comics' film. They were passed out at various sections of the town. The cost of the printing was very small since the makeup was simplified. In addition to giving out the checks, Richmond also distributed some heralds made up in the form of reserved seat theatre tickets. The tickets, like the checks, went over very well.

A word about Richmond. He's former general manager of the Winchester Amusement Company, Springfield, Mass., and former owner of the Bijou, also in Springfield. For the past 18 months he has been working in Boston for the E. M. Loew Theatres. With that background, it's small wonder that he's active. We want to see some more, Louis.

Waugh Wallops Still Another Over Fence For B. O. Home Run

The intrepid Howard Waugh, master showman from the wilds of Winnipeg, Can., has gone and done it again. Howard recently put over a smashing campaign at the house he manages, the RKO Capitol Theatre, in "Charley's Aunt."

He contacted the Winnipeg Public Library and branches in the city to use 3,000 bookmarks on the picture, for three weeks in advance of the playdates. An amusing situation came to light during the time the bookmarks were being handed out. Howard and the library found out that no book by the name had ever been written.

Five hundred special one sheets were posted carrying copy: "National Laugh Week Commences March 2nd—'Charley's Aunt' (big type) Will Be Winnipeg's Guest Gloom Dispenser."

A tie-up was made with 198 chain stores, and each store distributed circulars (totaling in all 150,000) with every purchase. They also put out a special "Charley's Aunt" cookie. Window strips plugging the picture were placed on many of the store windows. The chain store company also mentioned the picture in their ads.

Another very valuable tie-up was obtained with the Canadian General Electric Company and their dealers, who, combined, used over 10,000 lines of display advertising, giving Waugh practically the whole part of an ad campaign estimated to cost $1,200. The campaign commenced 7 days in advance of the opening day and appeared on the amusement pages of all local papers. They also donated to the theatre an electric refrigerator, which was given away to a lucky patron. The local dealers all arranged window displays on this angle, mentioning, of course, the picture.

On the Sunday before the picture opened Waugh distributed 1,000 special rubber nuts in pay envelopes suitably labelled with copy, at the various toboggan slides.

The activities we have so far listed are but highlights of his campaign. He also went through the regular routine, which included a knockout front, made up for laughs, newspaper ads, publicity, pictures, trailers, etc. Small wonder, huh, that the picture clicked in an excellent box-office? But then, "Where there's a Waugh there's a Waugh," as the Manitoba Mystic might murmur.

Boucher Is Artist At Promoting Goods In Hagerstown, Md.

His activity at the Warner Brothers' Maryland Theatre in Hagerstown, Maryland, has again been productive of excellent business along the patronage building line for Frank M. Boucher, district manager for Warners in Maryland. Frank has done quite a bit of promoting since last we heard of him, and the list of stuff that he has landed would stock a fairly large sized store.

Here's his promotions for the special ladies' matinees given every afternoon but Wednesday: four pair of silk hose, to four ladies bearing ticket numbers corresponding to those called off the stage; two ten-pound sugar cured hams; three two-pound boxes of chocolates; six dinners at a local hotel. These form the special inducements for the females to attend the matinee. Frank also plans to run another Maryland Gift contest similar to the one he ran last year, and which you all remember as successful. For this stunt he has already promoted: a Ford automobile, an electric refrigerator, an electric clock, a kitchen cabinet, an electric washing machine, a savings account, a gas range, an electric radio, a lady's outfit, a man's outfit, and a wrist watch.

Some list of promotions, huh? But Frank is busy on other lines, too. We are showing a cut of the co-operative page he obtained on "Free Love," when the film played the theatre. Look over the page and see if you can pick out a couple of its points and use them in your own town. Incidentally, Frank had the "Our Gang" kids as guests at the theatre recently and during the engagement of the youngsters gave them a fine campaign that delighted not only the kid movie stars but the youngsters of Hagerstown as well. Eskimo pies were but one of the treats given the kids. Thanks, Frank, we are looking forward to the success of your Gift Nights.

A Friendly Tip!

If the press book on one of your coming attractions carries an advance story particularly worthwhile in your town, DON'T, DON'T and DON'T clip it and send it to the paper in that form.

Type it out first, adding your local slants, theatre and playdates, then send it along to the paper.

Even newspaper editors lose their respect for a manager who makes a pair of scissors his chief assistant and publicity man. If you use stories from your press book, just follow the suggestion and type them out first.

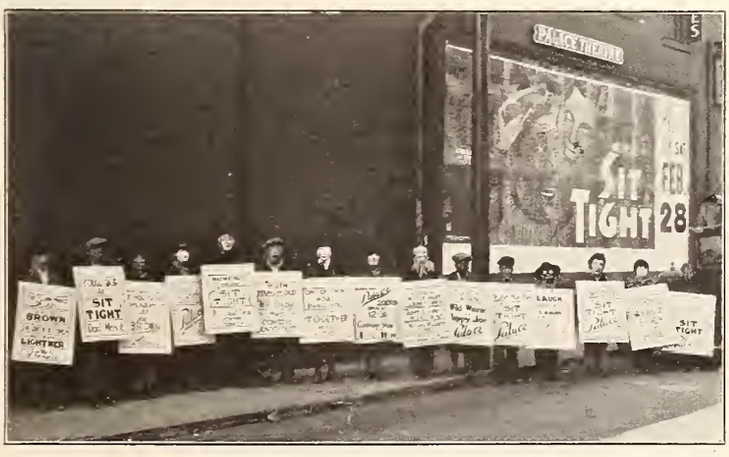
Harold Kaplan Had Fine Campaign To Put "Reducing" Over

Harold Kaplan, manager of the Century Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., planned an extensive exploitation campaign in order to insure the success of his showing of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Reducing." He was assisted quite ably by an M-G-M exploiteer.

Kaplan arranged with the advertising director of the theatre and a Mr. Murphy of the Purity Bread Co., in Minneapolis, for the use of a diet card which stated, "For breakfast, one slice of toast." Right after this was inserted "Taystee Bread," and also copy on the production and the theatre. Fifty thousand of these were printed and distributed through the Purity Bread Co., who inserted these cards in loaves of bread.

Kaplan also secured a tie-up with the Witts Meat and Grocery Market, the largest in the city. They distributed 10,000 special heralds on "Reducing," with copy on the picture on one side and on the other a list of foods for reducing purposes. These heralds were put into each package that went out of the store.

With the co-operation of Edward Lewis, who is in charge of the Liberty Magazines in this territory, Kaplan arranged for 500 small cards to be printed and attached to each Liberty bag which the boy carried. Copy on these cards read: "It's a Riot—See 'Reducing' with Marie Dressler and Polly Moran at the Century Theatre Now." These were carried for four days during the showing of the picture.



In addition to these tie-ups, Kaplan arranged for announcements to be made over radio stations SKTP, WCCO and WDGY.

The results of this campaign more than justified the work put in by Kaplan. We hope that we'll have some more of this live-wire showman's work to pass along in the very near future. What do you say, Harold? Let's hear from you.

Hamilton Used This 12 Years Ago; But It's Still A Corker

The picture being plugged by R. B. Hamilton, manager of the Palace Theatre in Norwich, Conn., was "Sit Tight," the laugh riot starring Joe E. Brown and Winnie Lightner, and so Hamilton felt that he needed a street ballyhoo that would have the town laughing, and at the same time sell them on the show in a manner that would impress.

Fourteen boys were hired and equipped with compoboard sandwich signs carrying various plugs on the picture. The boys were also given masks to wear. The masks were placed on their faces and the back of their heads. The youngsters paraded about the various sections of the town, attracting attention wherever they appeared. This stunt, which, incidentally, clicked very well, for Hamilton was first pulled by him in Chicago some 12 years ago with Eddie Cantor in "The Midnigh t Rounders." Which again proves that a stunt doesn't have to be discarded when once used in conjunction with a certain form of amusement.

Here's a gag that should go over very well for you in your own town. It can be handled quite inexpensively, and, after all, that's what every one is looking for. Remember, it can be used in conjunction with many kinds of plugs. We want to thank Hamilton for passing this one along and we are already looking forward to seeing what else he has that will boost business and keep the ticket machine singing a continuous song.

It's Clean-Up Time!

Following our suggestions for brightening up the theatre, we again call your attention to several items worthy of immediate attention.

Relamping flasher and signs.
Inspection of ventilating equipment.
Carpet cleaning on a big scale with beaters and vacuum.
Touching up or refinishing the lobby and front frames.
Relamping the lobbies and interiors.
Clean out those isolated coves and reflectors.
Weather permitting, air out the entire house every morning.
Get after those spots where the hired help like to throw refuse and rubbish and see that they are cleaned out thoroughly.
Don't let the ashes accumulate in the cellar.
Wash down the stone work in front of the theatre.

A close inspection of the entire house from roof to cellar is now in order. Make it a complete job this time regardless of when you last went over the house. See that everything is in ship-shape for the warm weather to come.

Hilton Has Had Ten Years Of Show'nship At Plaza In Norwood

We don't know just who, among our thousand of showman members, holds the record for remaining longest at one house, but we do know that we have many to whom ten years of service is nothing at all. We want to introduce a new member at this time who has served not ten but thirteen years in the same house.

Irvin S. Hilton is the manager of the Plaza Theatre in Norwood, Ohio. Mr. Hilton has remained all this time in the one spot. He has done the buying of film; the booking of it; and the advertising and selling of it. It may well be supposed that he knows his town from the showman angle. He has certainly studied it enough to obtain a first hand knowledge of the public likes and dislikes in Norwood. We think that his work should furnish some interesting sidelights and we would like to hear some of them.

Listen, Irvin, how about sitting down one of these days and letting us know what you are doing to keep them coming up to the box-office and ringing the cash register? We want to welcome you into the Club and we hope to hear lots more from you in the very near future. Oke?

Kay Edits Part Of Special Supplement Of His Local Paper

You will recall that some time ago we told you that out in Painesville, Ohio, the local paper, in an effort to stimulate business and reader interest, decided to inaugurate a special Saturday feature section. And, as might be expected, Harold Kay, on the loose trying to grab publicity for his house, took the most of the opportunity to offer to take care of a large portion of the make-up and contribute some items from the theatre world that would interest the patrons of the Park and Utopia Theatre, as well as the public at large.

We have the first issue of the Saturday feature section of the Painesville Telegraph on hand. It is certainly a nice piece of work, and shows that Harold, besides being a showman also knows something about the writing and newspaper racket. The section contained twelve pages, a number of which were on the theatre. The rest of the pages were diversified, containing fashion and home items, rod and gun notes, and news of general interest. The issue on our desk is the first. We are sure that as time goes on it will improve. We must say that their first issue is oke. If you want a copy we are sure that Kay will send one along to you.

Oke, Harold, we want to see your next few issues too so that we can see what's being done along the lines of better business.

Special Attraction At Blenheim Was A Box-Office Winner

At various times showmen endeavor to secure for their houses special stage attractions that will be of major interest. Of such calibre are "The Siamese Twins" acts; magic acts; mind reading acts, and others notable as possessing neighborhood appeal and box-office power.

Recently at the Blenheim Theatre in the Bronx, New York City, J. B. Hardy, manager of the house arranged for the appearance of a mystic called "Prince Shah Barba," who professed to know past, present, and future. And as far as neighborhood reaction went, the Shah was alright. How they flocked to the theatre to listen to him talk and to ask questions! The mystic proved one of the biggest drawing cards to play the house in many a month. Not only did men and women, young men and young women, ask questions of interest, but the children also flocked to the house. They were given attention, too. Which made a big hit with the mothers who were in the house.

But we'll give the Shah a rest now and tell you how Hardy sold him. One of his first stunts was the use of a special herald that plugged the mystic and the pictures at the Blenheim. Hardy then created a nice setting in the lobby. We are showing a photo of it, so that you can look it over. A portrait of the Pshaw, (pardon us, we mean Shah) was placed against a background of royal proportions. A red spot played upon the mystic, lending to the inscrutible, indefinable, Oriental features a mystic tone calculated to induce awe. Yep! The stunt proved to be very effective, though. You should have seen the mob that turned out for the shows. The best part of the whole campaign was the fact that ace results were obtained at a minimum cost. Which, you will all agree, is showmanship.

And maybe you don't think Hardy is turning out good work at the Blenheim. Well, we'll tell you that since he has been there he has more than made good and is displaying that kind of showmanship that has characterized his work ever since he has been in the show racket. He is well acquainted with the neighborhood now and can about figure just what will best hit for the public. And, best of all, the public up in the Bronx knows Hardy. Which helps, too, you will agree.

From South Africa!

Our latest member to enroll from South Africa is Alexander Sullivan, manager of the Recreations Theatre in Stellenbosch.

The Recreations Theatre is located in the country, but is nevertheless a busy place, as the locality is noted as a University center. We want to take this means of welcoming Mr. Sullivan to the fast growing ranks of showmen from across the seas, who are becoming members of the Managers' Round Table Club, and express the hope that we'll hear from him again very soon.

Meet Edward O'Donnell Who Hails From Chi; Ace Showman!

Here we introduce Edward Emmett O'Donnell, resident manager of Publix, Balaban, and Katz Senate Theatre in Chicago, Ill. We have quite a few good things to say about O'Donnell, so we think that we'll go into our speech right away and show you how he shows Chicago showmanship.

O'Donnell, on Lincoln's Birthday, found himself confronted with an "adults only" picture. That meant kid business would be null and void for the day, a day on which no schools were in session. It wouldn't do. O'Donnell decided that he wanted a special morning show for the kids. There'd have to be some live exploitation, though. So into the scene stepped Jonas Perlberg, formerly of Jacksonville, Fla., and now working out of the Balaban & Katz exploitation department in Chicago.

Together the two showmen doped out an effective plan. It was decided upon that the local bank, celebrating its anniversary, should take part in the plan and sponsor the party. The bank readily agreed, the president of the organization heartily approving the idea and immediately issuing an order that 15,000 pluggers be gotten out and cards placed in all of the bank windows.

Next was placed on the street a large decorated float with a public address system. The float visited all of the schools where announcements of the forthcoming show were broadcast to the children, who were certainly delighted to learn that they were in line to obtain free tickets from the local bank. The newspapers picked up the story and gave it an excellent break in the colmns, and like the bank plugged the fact that any kid, accompanied by a parent, going to the bank on party day would be given a free ticket.

Four thousand kids jammed the theatre on the day of the party, which consisted of an organ solo, a stage presentation by the Boy Scouts, a Lincoln tableau, novelties, a comedy, and a screen feature, "With Byrd at the South Pole." A box of birthday cake and a small American flag was given every kid attending the show.

The bank paid for the admission tickets, pluggers and all advertising. It is interesting to note that they deemed the party such a success that they plan another in the very near future. And that's good judgment, if you ask us. And now for a word about O'Donnell.

He started as an usher 13 years ago at the Balaban & Katz Central Park Theatre, attending during days Loyola University. The Central Park has been called America's first de luxe motion picture house and was the start of the Balaban-Katz chain, later becoming a part of Publix. It was at the Central Park that Sam Katz, A. J., and Barney Balaban worked out their ideas for stage presentations and augmented orchestra, introducing also the first cooling system.

After studying under the tutelage of John Balaban for six months, O'Donnell was promoted to assistant manager, which ultimated later in the management of the house. He remained at the Central Park for five years, after which time he managed other Balaban Katz theatres in Chicago, which included the Chicago, Roosevelt, Tivoli, Paradise, McVickers and the Senate. He also supervised installation of the Vitaphone in the McVickers, the first theatre in the Central West to inaugurate and introduce sound and talkies. O'Donnell has introduced many innovations in the Chicago theatres, and, in addition, has schooled hundreds of men for the B. & K. service staff.

Of All Things!

Jack Benny, the nimble-witted monologist, is appearing in Baltimore this week. Last week he played one of those immense sized movie theatres in Washington.

"The house was so large," he writes, "that they do not hire a manager every four years. They elect a governor!"

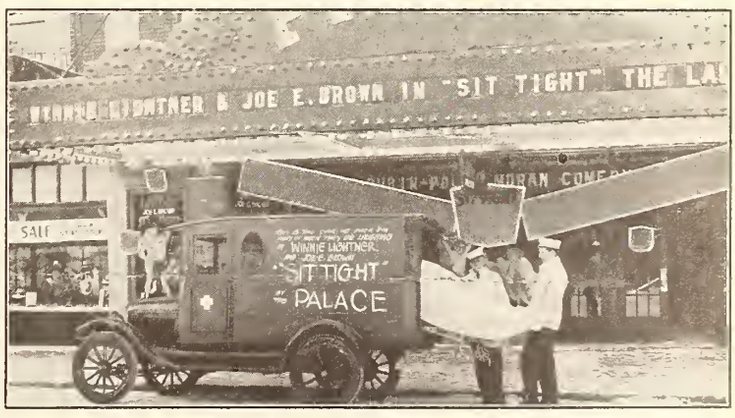
—Winchell in "N. Y. Mirror"

May—A Good Show Month!

During the month of May the following special events take place, all of which can be tied in effectively with the theatre. Watch the Showman's Calendar each week for advance dope on these dates, but here are some particularly worth starting on now:

May 1st to 8th, National Child Health Week.
May 3rd to 10th, National Music Week.
May 4th to 9th, National Golf Week.
May 10th, Mother's Day.

The coming of real warm weather in May generally cuts into the theatre's usual business, but smart showmen will more than make up for this loss through the activities in connection with the above events and dates.



Egan, Now At Calgary, Batting Out Great Showmanship

Pete Egan started to bat out showmanship the moment he landed in his new assignment at the Palace Theatre in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, where he had been transferred from the Capitol Theatre in Regina, Saskatchewan.

One of the first things that dazzled the Calgary public was the ace front Pete turned out for "Vienesse Nights." Since it packed considerable wallop we are passing it along to the rest of the Club so that it can be looked over, and perhaps used, should any of our members be planning to play the picture. The front, as you will note, is carried out in a dignified tone throughout, and the cut-outs, etc., are well spotted. You will note, too, that Pete believes in selling them with corking copy on the marquee.

Pete's next was an exploitation stunt on "Going Wild," and it was well timed to break just when most persons would see it. He hired an old flivver truck and converted it into an ambulance. On the sides was painted copy. "This is the car we pack 'em away in when they die laughing at Winnie Lightner and Joe E. Brown (picture, playdates). Two attendants, dressed in appropriate costume, lifted a dummy body on and off the truck whenever crowds were about. This stunt had nearly all of Calgary laughing. It most assuredly helped boost business an extra amount at the box-office.

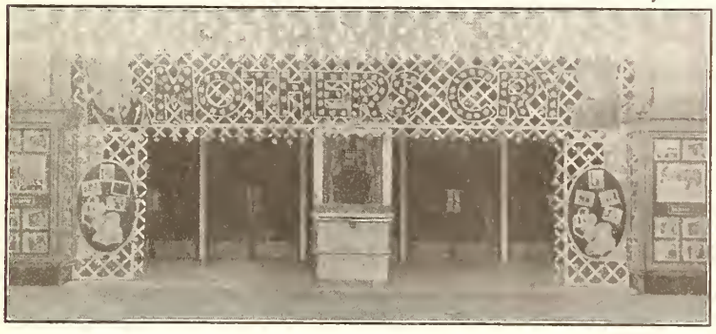
As Pete gets to know the town even better we are sure that there will be more showmanship stuff from his vicinity.

"Col." Flynn Stubblefield



One of Louisville's showmen received a fine honor recently by an appointment as Colonel on the staff of Governor Flem S. Sampson. The showman is Flynn J. Stubblefield, manager of the Strand Theatre in Louisville, Ky.

The fact that the Strand was the first theatre in Louisville, and one of the first in the United States to install talkie equipment and the efforts of Stubblefield to present worth-while entertainment to the city were factors taken under consideration when it was suggested that Stubblefield receive the honor. Congratulations, Flynn.

Hostler's Displays Are Aid To Him In Selling Of Pictures

Not only does Alvin Hostler, manager of the Warner Theatre, Altoona, Pa., know how to sell his shows, but when it comes to making up a display, he knows how to make it up. And why not? He is an expert artist.

The other photo, created for "Mother's Cry," shows a display built entirely of white lattice work, covered with red, yellow, and pink roses. The cut-out letters spelling out the name were made of beaverboard and painted black with a silver metallic outline, the centers of the letters being built up with roses. At either end of the lattice work was placed figures of leading characters in the production. An oval at either end on the bottom of the lattice work carried stills from the picture.

Hostler has always been noted for the ace displays he turns out in Altoona, and since he is very active along this line we hope that he will send some more along to us in the near future, so that we can pass them along.

Stage Attraction Given Great Plug By Bolivar Hyde, Jr.

They had a great anniversary party at the Paramount Theatre in Montgomery, Alabama, recently, and its success was due, in no small measure, to the work turned out by Bolivar Hyde, Jr. Not only did Hyde plug the anniversary, but also the special stage attraction he was featuring, and the picture, which happened to be an exceptionally good one.

The stage attraction was Mercedes, a well-known vaudevillian who has been using a mind reading act for years. Hyde knew that the act would go over great in his town, accordingly he stepped out to sell the show with a great deal of pep, vim and vigor. Here's a line on what he did.

Mercedes and his assistant, Mlle. Stantone, appeared at the Governor's inaugural luncheon. This netted stories in the daily papers. Next they appeared at the Mayor's office, and again netted publicity. A special radio tie-up was arranged and Mercedes displayed some of his talent—just enough to excite interest and bring persons into the theatre. A piano company tied the act into its copy and ran a special ad. Mercedes appeared at the Women's College of Alabama and addressed the psychology class. The talk was productive of the students' business. 200 prominent citizens were called by telephone and given a direct sales talk. 5,000 envelopes, containing lifesavers, were distributed. They carried copy on the picture and Mercedes. Special trailers, heralds, art work, comment cards, stunts—all combined to give Bolivar an excellent week's business. The campaign was one of the most extensive ever used in Montgomery. And business showed it. We hope that we'll hear from Bolivar again with some more of his live-wire work so that we can pass it along.

Bumper Cards Placed On Canton Cars Were Ace Plug For Riester

"There'll be no depression around me," shouted George J. Riester, manager of the Warner Palace Theatre in Canton, Ohio. And to prove that he meant what he said, he distributed a bunch of paper napkins imprinted with: "Please hand this crying towel to the next bozo who comes to you crying depression and tell him to go and see Bert Wheeler and Bob Woolsey in "Hook, Line and Sinker." They were very effective.

But Riester has other stunts equally effective. He pulled a good one recently on "Sit Tight." A quantity of bumper cards were imprinted with the title of the picture. The cards measured seven by forty-two inches and were placed on the rear bumpers of every parked car in the town, by means of rubber bands. At least a thousand were driven around the town. The title of the picture received plenty of plugging on this one.

Then there was the gag on "The Big Trail." For this, Riester concentrated on the theatre front, and an immense compoboard covered wagon, completely covering the theatre front and extending to the sidewalk was constructed. Patrons were obliged to stoop slightly before entering, but this discomfort only served to enhance the effect. Small covered wagons, made of cardboard were spotted under the marquee. They were also placed in some of the downtown stores. The picture's receipts, as a result of this alert exploitation, we feel sure increased more than was expected. We'd like to have some more of your work so that we can pass it along, George. What do you say?

Borland Executed An Excellent Campaign Opening Two Houses

Just to show you that he continues ot display activity in his capacity as general manager of the Quality Amusement Corp., of Chicago, Ill., we want to pass along these recent opening campaigns Hugh Borland made use of to announce the shows at the Olympia and Oak Theatres.

For his campaign at the Oak, he started a week in advance and posted 500 one sheets with copy: "Don't Fail To Attend The GRAND OPENING of the NEW OAK THEATRE (location and date) Greater Entertainment For Less Money," In addition, the neighborhoods were flooded with 5,000 heralds carrying copy on both sides.

On the night of the opening, a sedan, equipped with microphone and record attachments toured the community and played several of the newer song hits. It was announced that the songs were played through the courtesy of the New Oak Theatre. Following the musical rendition, Borland spoke through the mike saying: "At last your neighborhood has the first miniature de luxe theatre, bringing to you the same type of entertainment that is now being shown at B. & K. loop and outlying neighborhood theatres at 75-60-50 cents, and which we will show at prices that will take Chicago by storm. Come one! Come all! Get acquainted with the neighborhood's new joy spot of greater entertainment at prices to fit everyone's pocketbook."

That stunt went over very well. Another equally successful was the placing on lamp posts for two blocks in every direction from the theatre streamers and shields announcing the opening of the picture and plugging its policy and features.

The campaign for the opening of the Olympia was similar to that of the Oak, following the one sheet posting and radio street talk idea closely. A special stunt was the distribution of 5,000 heralds as plugs on the kiddie business and also announcing that kids could see the matinee show on Saturday for a nickel. Good-work, Hugh. We'd like some more.

Titians Trekked Theatrewards!

Here's one for "Millie" that you might want to use. (And if you want to use it on any other picture, remember you can.) Vic Meyers, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, New Orleans, La., announced that any ladies possessing red hair would be admitted as guests during the run of the picture.

P. S.—He didn't know that New Orleans was so well red! We think next time, he'll allow the ladies only at a specified matinee. Right, Vic?

Take A Look At This: Credit Goes To Ted Gamble Of Portland

An eyeful of up-to-the-minute showmanship that again exemplifies the opportunities that await a live-wire showman is, to us, seen in the full-page we are showing here that represents one of the recent activities of Ted Gamble, manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Portland, Ore.

Some time ago a New Jersey judge declared the 18th Amendment void. At about this time, Gamble was playing "See America Thirst." He immediately turned out a full page, conforming to newspaper standards, even to the paper, and distributed them about the streets. What a sensation the gag created. Every one reached out the papers being given away by kids.

Biggest Laugh In Ten Years Hits Town Today

Here again is to be seen the value of keeping in touch with events that are going on all over the country. You can never tell when they will prove productive of publicity for your theatre. We number many showmen in the Club who have, like Gamble, been pulling special stunts every time that opportunity offered. You, too, can do it. Perhaps not nationally, or on stunts of national interest, but locally, which, after all, may prove to possess more pulling power than a stunt of other kind. We'd like to see some more of the showmanlike work we know is going on around Oregon. Let's hear from this section more often.

Highway Commiss'n Refused Rogers Permiss'n On State Road

Quite some job H. M. Rogers had recently when he set out to sell "Hell's Angels" to the residents of Sweetwater, Texas, and the surrounding vicinity, but, as all good showmen do, Rogers hopped over the obstacles and hit the fast track along the home stretch to good box-office business.

The obstacle that presented itself to Rogers—and it was quite a formidable one, too—was that of the State Highway Commission. Rogers wanted to transport a plane, by truck, along the highway to the theatre. Thumbs down were placed on the proposition by the commish. But did Rogers give up then? No, sir! The next thing he did was to inform the plane company tying up with him that they could use a competent pilot and drop the plane in one of the vacant lots in Sweetwater.

This, accordingly, was done. And so we find that Rogers was on hand with a truck, which transported the plane to the front of the theatre, where it was placed on display. The signs to be seen on the wings of the plane were placed there a couple of weeks before playdates, as the plane was flown about the various towns, low enough for the residents to note the title of the picture; some of them, so Rogers says, even believed that the plane was one of the original used by Hughes.

The plane's transportation to the theatre didn't cost Rogers a cent. A very clever catchline was originated and placed on both sides of the hauling truck. The signs said: "We haul anything from baby buggies to aeroplanes." The plane gag was one that did a lot to help put the picture across. We are showing a photo of it here, and if you'll study it you will notice that Rogers has promoted nurses' uniform and National Guard suits. Rogers, himself, can be seen in the photo. He is the unassuming gent with the felt hat. His assistant, H. E. Phelps, can be seen wearing an air uniform. He's a student pilot, we are told. The rest of the individuals in the picture are members of the house staff, the ushers, doorman and cashier. We think that Rogers and his gang of live-wires deserve a hand for the splendid work that was turned out in the face of the obstacles encountered. Congratulations, "H. M.," and let's hear from you some more.

Showmanship—Fifteen Years Ago!

J. W. Ballenger, of the Opera House in York, Neb., published the "York Theatre News" as a regular part of his showselling. . . . Guy A. Curtis created a novel vest-pocket, folding program for his Isis Theatre in Independence, Ia. . . . and the Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa., started a campaign to sell the theatre's name to the public via a series of house organs and ads. . . . W. H. Wasserman, manager of the Knickerbocker Theatre in Nashvalle, secured and distributed to all lady patrons small phials of perfume as a booster for "Gloria's Romance" at his theatre, and, according to the records, it was classed as one of the greatest drawing cards ever pulled off at the Knickerbocker. . . . Manager Rhoades of the Gilman Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., made a count of the vehicles passing his theatre each hour and discovered the number to be one thousand. . . . We wonder what today's count would be? . . . Then we find that Manager Uran of the Grand Theatre in Mattoon, Ill., tied up with a public library on "The Call of the Cumberlands," whereby he placed that book on the shelves of the library and advertised the fact to the theatre-goers of his town. . . . And here's one for the W & V boys in Pennsy to talk about. . . . C. Floyd Hopkins, of the Wilmer and Vincent interests in Harrisburg, Pa., made arrangements to photograph the mobilization of the Harrisburg guardsmen and their activities at the training camp. . . . These pictures brought out the mobs in Harrisburg who were anxious to see how the home-town boys behaved while in camp. . . . Arthur J. Stolte, of the Palace in Vinton, Iowa, pulled a real fast one when he capitalized on President Wilson's call to state guardsmen to prepare for the Mexican invasion. . . . He made up a novelty herald to resemble the front page of a newspaper and distributed it throughout Vinton and vicinity. . . . And in case you don't know it, Chick Lewis was taking amateur movies up in Hazleton, Pa., for the Palace Theatre in that city. . . . But who cares about that. . . . The court summons gag for advertising a picture was used with much success by Joe Vion of the Crescent Theatre in the Bronx, N. Y. Incidentally the picture they were selling was a locally made affair with a strictly local cast. . . . We'd like to see it today. . . . The Alhambra Theatre in Detroit, Mich., under the direction of John H. Kunsky, popularized Kiddie Matinees with specially prepared programs for the youngsters and kept the idea going for years without a letup. . . . And the Alpha Airdrome in Bethany, Mo., sent out a ballyhoo consisting of two boys with large mirrors to create interest in "As in a Looking Glass," then current at the Airdrome. . . . And while on the subject of ballyhoos . . . let us tell you that Harry V. Side, manager of the Monroe Theatre out in Omaha, dressed a flock of boys in sailor suits and paraded them around the town to plug "The Secret of the Submarine" for his house. . . . T. A. Boatwright, of Tabor, Ia., was called upon, via a special resolution of the women's clubs of that city, to run a special children's show at least once a week . . . while Manager John Cummings, of the Apollo in Omaha, earned the praise of the Mother's Club by reason of the fine shows he was putting on for the kiddies . . . incidentally, we might add at this time that Manager Phil Goldstone, of the World Film Exchange in Omaha, in order to convince the management that children shows were profitable, donated the film free to Cummings for several weeks . . . and last, but not least, the "fast-work" medal of fifteen years ago should have been given to H. C. Smith, of Almena, Kansas, for using his head in an emergency when the lighting plant burned out and he had a "big special" booked for his theatre . . . he scouted around until he found a spare generator at an ice plant some fourteen miles away and brought it in, hooked it to a Ford car and, after stretching wire across the street from the garage where he was generating his current to the theatre, proceeded to give his show. . . .

So long 'til next week!

Scared?

Well, maybe some one else was, but not Harry Storin, managing director of the RKO Albee Theatre in Providence, R. I., for Harry insisted on opening "Dracula" on Friday the 13th, birthday of ghosts, ghouls, goblins, witches and "Dracula."

Taking his cue from a New York newspaper story that stated Roxy refused to open "Dracula" on the legendary unlucky day, Storin broke in the Providence newspaper with the shown ad smash.

It was practically impossible to miss it on the amusement page. It stood out like a Scotchman in a speakeasy, and it absolutely did plenty to put the picture across.

It created a sensation! And if you know Providence, you'll know that a stunt has to be good to create a sensation. Look over some of the ace ads that have recently emanated from there, and you'll agree with us!

Harold Lee, Running Babcock In Bath, N. Y., Active Showman

If you have seen, many times, the work turned out by Harold C. Lee, manager of the Babcock Theatre in Bath, N. Y. At this time we are going to show you what Lee looks like and tell you a bit about his career in the show game.

The theatre game, thinks Lee, is a great racket, and that, if lived as is done in other professions, it can't be beat. Lee started at the bottom of the ladder, being but 15 years old when he started winding reels and working about the theatre. Since then he has handled all angles, both backstage and out front of the house. Back in the days of the travelling road attractions he had charge of the stage. On the side he operated and ushered. He didn't make much money then, but he certainly received a wealth of experience.

He has been working with circuits only six years, five of which were spent with the Schine interests and the other with Fox. It was for Schine that Lee opened the Babacock Theatre in Bath six years ago. He has striven since then to secure and hold good-will for the house, because he thinks that in a small town this is very, very important, and is also in keeping with the company's policy. His house has been redecorated and new carpets laid, and wall treated with acoustic tile. New projection equipment and a wide screen was installed. Keep your eye on Lee and see what else he does to keep business humming.

Selette Was Turning Out Ace Work Up In Portsmouth, N. H.

According to what we hear—and all we hear is what goes on in the showselling end of the show business—the showman who formerly handled the Arcadia Theatre in Portsmouth, N. H., turned out some excellent work. The showman was Edward Selette, who, not so long ago, was located right here in the Big City, acting as artists' representative and producer; his offices being situated on Broadway.

Selette is selling his shows at a house that boasts the distinction of being the first to bring low prices to the city. This move, incidentally, put Selette way ahead of his competitors, as it seems that the residents, for quite some time, had been wanting low prices. Selette got them back to the theatre. When he got them back to the theatre, he started to sell them so that they'd keep on patronizing the house. And how he sold them!

A stunt that goes over very well in the house is that of giving away gifts, promoted from the local merchants, on one night a week. The gifts range from candy to floor lamps, and from manicure sets to a bank account. The stunt is one that goes over very well, and it has been more than instrumental in the procuration of additional business. The gifts are placed on display in advance of the special night. The photo will show you how many gifts are obtained and given away weekly to holders of lucky numbers.

Then there's the matter of kiddie business getting at the Arcadia. Selette calls his club a booster club. He had quite a large number of kids registered in it already. To stimulate interest, he, in addition to pulling stunts with the kids, places 25 numbers on a bulletin board afront the theatre. Kids having membership cards corresponding with the numbers on the board are granted free admission to the theatre. Selette also has a novel method of securing new memberships. He tells the kids, in his newspaper ads, that if they want to join, the member wishing to join should bring in two other members at the same time. And the kids do!

The residents of the town take a great deal of interest in the theatre. Selette tells us that his is a patrons' theatre; the patrons have gotten into the habit of requesting pictures, and making suggestions; but never have they criticized a picture. In order to further ascertain the interest taken by the public in the theatre, Selette announced a contest on "Why I Patronize the Arcadia," in which the best letters on the subject were given free tickets to the theatre. The contest was limited to the first 50 letters received. The first week he received over 500 letters—and they are still coming in!

Selette, himself, takes a great deal of pride in the service that is given the patron. During a snowstorm a boy, carrying a whisk broom, brushes the snow from the clothing of the patrons. A stunt that has met with the favor of the matinee patrons is that of giving free candy to all attending the matinee shows. Still another stunt—and one that boosted a serial opening to fine results—was the giving away of a free ticket to the opening chapter to the first kids with dogs appearing to see Rin-Tin-Tin. The kids' business, incidentally, grew so big that a couple of hundred kids had to be turned away for lack of seats, thus necessitating the starting of the show at 10 A. M. This show was given plenty of plugging and went over well.

We are sure that this showman will prove an active member, and we hope that his next contribution will include his photo.

J. P. THOMPSON Says:

"We have picked up several excellent ideas from the* Managers' Round Table Club, *and may I say it should be heavily endorsed by all members connected with such a wonderful bunch of splendid showmen."

Oscar Fashions A Group Of Heralds That Are Corking

At this time we want to say a word or two regarding the show-selling going on in Athens, Ala. And why should we say a word or two about the show-selling in Athens, Ala.? Just because we want to keep you posted on Earle Oscar's doings at the Ritz Theatre and let you know that he is active as usual.

Earle has a hobby for getting up neat looking heralds and programs, and he is pretty proud of his work (as he should be). He found time to send us in a whole batch of impressive programs and heralds, and he decided that we'd have to show one that made a particular impression. In selecting it from the batch, we did so only because it, to us, embodies not only simplicity and judiciousness in the use of cuts and copy, but also represents a minimum expenditure in printing, and a not too tedious job of makeup for the printing, thereby eliminating long waits before the heralds were done, and allowing Oscar to give them proper distribution.

The herald measures five by five and one-half inches. It is printed in black and white. Again we ask you to note the simplicity of make-up through the use of midget mats whenever possible. Study this herald, and if you think that it will be of account to you in your town, use it. If you would like to get a look at some of Oscar's heralds, all of which are made up at a minimum expenditure, drop him a line at the Ritz Theatre, Athens, Ala., and we are sure that he'll respond with any information requested. Thanks, Earle, for keeping us posted.

Remember our story not so long ago "Kids Are the Public, Too!" in which we stressed the importance of kiddie klubs? Get a load of this gang of youngsters all members of the Capitol Theatre Booster Club of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. The showman handling the Publix house is Morris Rosenthal, who is responsible for the sensational success of a kiddie klub which has grown to the proportions of a small army in the past few months. Morris derives a great deal of publicity for his house as a result of this medium. How about sending us in a photo or an account of your kiddie klub and the benefits your house has obtained as a result of it?

A Suggestion!

In many of the larger towns—those possessing daily papers—smart showmen send in weekly their starting time of features to the newspaper. The paper runs a box daily listing the various theatres, their attractions, and the time of starting.

Should your local paper not be doing this, perhaps it will be to your advantage to secure the stunt. The editors of various cities throughout the country are more than pleased with any suggestion which insures reader interest. Why not try it?

Shhh—It's a Secret, Salmon!

Determined to make his wedding event a secret affair, Joseph S. Salmon, manager of the Fox Riverside Theatre in New York, joined the ranks of the "worse halves" and married Betty Bentley of London, England.

Joe met his "Waterloo" out in Ocean Park, Calif., while working under Harry Arthur and the "little girl" followed him east. They were married last Saturday (March 28) by City Clerk Cruze before such celebrities as Harry Woodin, Charlie Kurtzman, Bill Madden, MacGuest and Ed. Vaughan, and you can imagine what a great guy Joe is when we say that most of these guests came from far distant points to attend.

Here's wishing the happy couple lots of luck and several bouncing, promising showmen???

Harrison's "Hell's Angels" Campaign A Corker In Waco, Tex.

To attempt to set down every one of the angles covered by J. P. Harrison, manager of the Waco Theatre in Waco, Texas, when he played "Hell's Angels" would take up more space than we can afford at this writing; so we'll just have to content ourselves with the highlights—among which was an excellent lobby and front display.

In the rear of the lobby was placed a large cut-out plane. It had a wing spread the whole length of the lobby and was about 15 feet in height. On the wings of the plane were cut-outs; in the panel with red paper over them and illuminated from the rear and reading, "Hell's Angels." On the body of the plane was painted the figures of Jean Harlow and Ben Lyon in a love scene with painted red flames leaping at them from the bottom of the plane. The cast was painted on the red flames.

Two small cut-out aeroplanes were placed in front of the lobby facing patrons coming out of the theatre. On them was painted the name of the picture, cast, etc., as well as announcement that the theatre would open at 12 o'clock for the engagement of the picture.

Ten small shadow boxes illuminated inside and on flasher buttons, were hung around in the lobby, foyer and on the mezzanine floor. Red crape paper was pasted behind the cut-outs on them which read, "Hell's Angels."

The front was also appropriately decorated with plane cut-outs, flags, etc., to give the house an elaborate display that caused people to believe that an outstanding picture was being shown.

Another excellent stunt that was used in advance was the showing of the trailer at the High School. The local school has a movie booth—and arrangements were made to show the trailer at a general assembly of the students.

A hookup was made with the local Penzoil dealers as to their oil being used in the flying machines that appeared in the picture. Ten large banners were hung in as many different stations advertising the picture, name of theatre and play dates. The Penzoil Company also played up the picture, theatre and play dates in their regular newspaper ads.

A Ford truck on which an aeroplane was mounted was driven around the town for two days in advance and during engagement. The plane was painted red and white and also contained the title of picture and prominent members of the cast.

At a vacant store window was placed a very attractive display. Around the back of the window was a gold drop which reached about half way to the floor and with panels from the bottom in flame-like formation. The center of the window beheld a miniature plane that had all the features of a real plane. In the background of the store window was a cut-out of a Zeppelin lumming upward. This was surrounded with cut-out "falling" planes and still on one of the panels. A display of stills was also placed in the foreground.

Two cut-out aeroplanes were placed on the outside of the window and also a regular-sized propeller with "Hell's Angels" painted on it.

These mediums alone would have been sufficient to sell the show. But Harrison, as is his custom, makes sure that his newspaper ads, etc., all are set in a manner that will sell. Which accounts for the fact that nearly all of his campaigns are great winners. Let's have some more accounts of your work, "J. P.," so that we can pass along your other activities.

Picking Up The Pieces

Pete Egan, former manager of the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Sask., Canada, and Regional Chairman of the Managers' Round Table Club, was editorialized recently. Occasion was Pete's transfer to the Palace Theatre in Calgary. "Broad and generous in his sympathies, his has been a helping hand in such activities that will be remembered with appreciation for a long time to come," declares the story of Pete's work in Regina.

In Hamilton, Ohio, recently, an individual tried to crash and was stopped by the doorman. "What's this?" demanded the doorman. "Listen, bo!" spieled the crashing gent, "you're using my name in a picture and if you don't let me in, I'll stop the show." Investigation developed the fact that the crasher's name was Bill Barnickel, a local truckman, and someone had told him that the theatre was playing "Barnicle Bill, the Sailor," and that the name had been swiped. The yokel was finally placated.

The fad continues to spread. And showmen are showing many columnists how to handle a column. In many towns throughout the country showmen are running newspaper columns on the movies. The editors all like the idea, particularly so since they do not have to pay for the material submitted.

Club corespondence, you know, has grown to magnititudinous proportions, and it's all that can be done to rush the various stunts into print as fast as we receive them. Here's a line on what to expect in the future and from whom:

Van Hook of the Rialto Theatre, Morrilton, Ark.; some more of Russell Bovim's work at the Loew's Theatre in Canton, Ohio; a corking batch of ads from Nat Holt, of Wichita, Kas.; Gus Carlson's latest from the Peoples' Theatre in Superior, Wis.; a talk by Don Davidson, the activities of Ralph E. Carrying A Gun Netted Arrest Of Man Selling Cowboy Film

Here's "Billy the Kid" all decked out in cowboy regalia but minus his "shootin' irons." And why? Just because, as Burns once said, "The best laid plans of mice and men oft go amiss." It happened this way to Heinie Johnson and Fred Polacek, the team from the R. & R. Ritz Theatre in Big Spring, Texas.

The boys decided that in order to properly sell "Billy the Kid," a street ballyhoo was in order. They, therefore, set out and hired a man and equipped him with all the cowboy outfit appurtenances, including a "shootin iron." The boys had arranged for a permit from the Chief of Police and the Sheriff's department, so that the cowboy could carry a gun, minus a cylinder. The cylinder was placed in the care of a deputy sheriff.

Out set "Billy the Kid," mounted on a fiery steed, much in the manner of the famous movie cowboys. Things went along wonderfully until the mounted horseman from the Big Spring prairies hit a crowded section of the town. Then into view hove the burly form of a minion of the law.

"Halt," demanded the officer, "will you come along peaceably or shall I use force?"

The astonished cowboy gasped.

"What's the matter?" he managed to gurgle.

"You're under arrest for carrying arms!"

"But," attempted to argue the cowboy, "I got a permit."

The officer, though, was not to be convinced nor swerved from what he considered to be the proper pursuit of his duties. In the sight of a few hundred people "Billy the Kid," the most desperate bandit of the Southwest was ignominously marched off to the hoosegow. He was later released when the situation was explained to the judge. But he didn't carry the gun.

The newspapers grabbed the item and used it as a story. We are showing it here. It helped boost business for the theatre. (And so did the officer.) Well, boys, let's hear some more from you. Your house certainly got a break on this stunt. What else are you doing? Let us know because we are sure that your activities are of interest to the rest of the Club.

Advantageous Tie-up Was Made By Owen On Schools Co-Op

Educational films have long been one of the mediums used by showmen to effect tie-ups with their local schools and educational centers; so it was only natural that Freddy Owen, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Tuscaloosa, Ala., should tie-up the local schools as a plug for "Birth of a Nation." And he made a tie-up of fine value.

Owen made a personal visit to the local superintendent of schools. The superintendent agreed, in consideration of the fact that Owen was going to give a reduced rate to children wishing to view the Griffith masterpiece, to permit the children, as many as wished, to visit the special morning shows that Owen planned to hold, and after the shows allow the pupils to enter the classroom without being counted absent for tardiness. How this gag made a hit with the kids! But Owen sold 2,000 tickets—and his house seats only 370. What a job he had to figure out a program. It was finally arranged to set a certain morning apart for three shows, one to be held at 9:30 A. M., another at 11 A. M., and another at 12:30 P. M. This did the trick. Every kid was accommodated, and all expressed their appreciation of the show.

When you stop to consider that Owen, during the run of "Birth of a Nation" had powerful opposition in the form of a million dollar or so production, you can easily see that he displayed a fine piece of showmanship. Good work, Freddy.

MAINTENANCE OF THE THEATRE!

MASTER SHOWMAN GIVES HIS VIEWS ON IMPORTANT TOPIC!

BY JACK O'CONNELL
VITA-TEMPLE THEATRE
TOLEDO, OHIO

LIKENS WELL-RUN THEATRE TO SEA-WORTHY SHIP! . . .

I saw a shot in the news reel of the Leviathan—the giant ocean liner. She was in dry dock high out of the water having the barnacles scraped off her hull. The scene was dynamic with activity . . . an army of men climbing all over this great ship, scraping, painting repairing and doing a hundred and one things to put her in readiness for another season of transatlantic voyages. Apparently each man had his job to do and he was leaving nothing undone to make his job a success.

The scene made me think how much alike is the care of that big ship and the care of our theatre, and how careless some of us are in keeping our theatre ship shape, by failing to attend to the little details as well as the major jobs around the theatre—especially so of our failure at times to attend to the things out of order below the water line, where we think it will escape the notice of the patron, but which we find out later to our regret affects the general operation of the theatre.

LIKE THE FARMER

When I see some theatre executives trying to reduce operating expenses by depriving patrons of the ordinary comforts and conveniences, to which they are entitled, I am reminded of the farmer carrying a heavy sack of grain to market some miles away. On being asked by a passerby why he carried the heavy sack, when he could have just as well hitched up his horse and wagon, replied, that he did not like to use the horse because the horse ate too much when he worked.

There are a lot of us in this business like that farmer. . . . We fail to light our theatre properly because of the light bill . . . we fail to put up the proper display because we do not want to buy accessories . . . we fail to extend the proper treatment to our patrons because we will not pay a dollar or two more to secure the right type of house attaches and we fail to do many important things because we think we are getting by and the public will not notice.

How foolish—how short sighted is the manager who thinks he can fool the public week after week. And when I stop to think of it, I do not recall one man in this business who ever made a lasting success operating on that policy.

This latest article from Jack O'Connell once again proves his versatility in show show business. Not only can he take a century old church building and turn it into a successful and famous movie temple; discuss the whys and wherefores of "De-Bunking The Ballyhoo"; pass along up-to-the-minute slants on publicity and other show-selling ideas; but, now he comes along and tells you something about the important phase of theatre operation dealing with the maintenance of the theatre's expensive and much-needed equipment and furnishings.

Showbusiness needs men like Jack O'Connell because, through their ability to understand what they are doing, they can convey something of their knowledge to their brother showmen. "Knowledge Through Understanding" and especially through experience is the kind of knowledge necessary to the proper operation of a theatre. O'Connell quailfies for that classification. He knows what he is talking about because he has learned through actual experience.

We have devoted much space on the Club pages to the maintenance angle and will continue to do so because, in our opinion, it represents one of the most important phases of a manager's job. We are, therefore, making a specific request at this time to our many members and readers to express themselves on this subject for the benefit of those who need a little enlightenment.

How you keep YOUR theatre's equipment and furnishings in tip-top condition is what we are all anxious to know. The Club pages are open to all for this discussion.

"Chick"

MASTER OF THE SHIP

Some weeks when we have a big hit in the house we are apt to stand in front, throw our chest out and take credit for the crowds trying to get into the theatre. The next week we become very humble and meek when we play the dud and the crowds pass us by. . . . One week in the clouds the next in the depths of despondency. . . . That's show business. . . . The great leveler of ego is a few poor shows in a row.

So let's remember during the good weeks when everything is going great and the goose hangs high that there might be something that we can do to add to the enjoyment and comfort of our patrons—to make our theatre a nice place to come to—to prove that our equipment and service is spic and span and that the little annoyances and inconveniences that might have cropped up have been anticipated by us in our careful daily inspection of the theatre and the immediate attention of the staff, to correct what is found to be wrong. If we operate along those lines we will find that when that poor week comes along and we are down in the mouth we will find consolation in the thought that we have done our best for our patrons. . . . We have pleased them and that no matter how black the sky and how rough the water we are master of our ship.

Cutting down the light bill by cutting down the lighting in the front of your theatre is rather poor economy if it takes away from that much-needed "flash" . . . Lighting attracts and adds to the appearance of your theatre; instead of trying to save money there you should be figuring out new ways of making that front even more attractive . . . Practice your economy by finding the "leaks" where money is being spent foolishly or carelessly, but not in making a morgue of your theatre. . .

No patron ever went out of a theatre praising it after they tripped on a piece of worn out carpet, tore a stocking on a broken seat, found a piece of chewing gum on their dress or coat, or had to use a foul-smelling lavatory. . . . Figure it out for yourself.

PATRON REACTION

The only time a patron comes to the manager to complain is when complaint directly affects that patron, seriously so, for instance—ripping a brand new pair of hose on a seat, falling down the stairs—getting chewing gum on the dress or many other of the more important complaints. But that same patron would not bother to look up the manager if he thought the house was mismanaged generally or there was nothing definite to complain about—the patron would leave the manager very much alone, in fact he would leave the theatre alone and go some where else for his entertainment.

You will hear some of the boys say that the public will stand for sawdust on the floors and soap boxes to sit on if they really want to see your show, that's probably true to a certain extent. . . . Sarah Bernhardt, some years ago, appeared in a tent in her tour of the southwest and packed 'em in, but that does not mean that the same public would sit in a tent week after week and that you can play a Sarah Bernhardt every week. We must remember that at best there are very few big money making pictures in a season and we must operate our theatres with that in mind.

It is our job to bring people back to our theatre week after week, or as many of them as we can sell on the idea that we are doing everything humanly possible to make their visits to our theatre comfortable and enjoyable.

After all the patron is the big shot in the scheme of things, in this business, as well as in any other business—not a bad thought to keep in mind by the way. We are only as valuable as our patrons make us; we cannot succeed without their good will and their money.

If the rental of your theatre amounted to ten or fifteen dollars a week more than you pay at present would you shut the house down as a bad investment? . . . we think not . . . then why hesitate and take six months to finally decide to buy some badly needed furnishings for your ladies' lounge or gentlemen's smoking room . . . or a new piece of carpet for that worn-out centre aisle . . . or a new change of bulbs for the interior of the house . . . or any little comforts which send the patron home with a kindly thought for you and your theatre.

Totaled up over the period of a year would reveal that the ten or fifteen extra dollars a week, mentioned above, is a high estimate of what you owuld be spending. . . . Don't you believe it's worth it?

Lights Strung Across Street Plugged Film For Holden & Bailey

Since he has been located at the Arcade Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., Earle Holden, manager of the house, has been hitting the showman apple into the center field bleachers week after week. He hit the town a terrific wallop on "Cimarron," Arkayo's film story of the Oklahoma land rush.

For the first time in the history of the city administration, permission was granted for the stringing of three-foot high cut-out letters across the main street of the city. Permission for the stunt was obtained by Nathan Bailey, Holden's assistant, who followed right after the civic body until he secured permission for the gag. The letters could be read in both directions and seen for a distance of three blocks. They were outlined in silver metallics, and at night street lights played upon the tinselled surface. This proved an excellent aid toward the success of the entire campaign.

Holden used an effective stunt, too, as an advance plug on "Dance, Fools, Dance." A week in advance window cards were distributed bearing copy:

REWARD
For the Murderer of
BERT SCRANTON
Reporter On the EVENING HERALD
KILLED BY GUNMEN
Enroute to His Office to Reveal Inside Working of VICE AND RACKETS
Phone West Palm Beach 8872

The theatre name, as will be noted, was not mentioned. The phone number listed in the Arcade Theatre. Persons calling up were informed that Bert Scranton is a character in "Dance Fools, Dance." Newspapers also ran similar copy. The stunt was one that excited a great deal of interest and as a result meant something at the box-office. Good work, Earle. And that goes for Bailey, too.

Kuehn Contacted A Local Drug Store; 5,000 Powder Kits

When it comes to making promotions there are many showmen in the Manager's Round Table Club who are certainly artists in the art of securing merchandise for nothing. We have among our promoters, Sid Lawrence, Howard Waugh, Jack Kaplan, Louis Orlove, Bill Levey, Frank Boucher, Bill Brown, Wally Allen, Jonas Perlberg and numerous others whose names we do not, at the moment, recall. And oh yes! there's Rudy Kuehn, managing the R. K. O. 58th Street Theatre in New York City. It's about Rudy's latest tie-up that we are going to say a word or two now.

When "Millie," the film with Helen Twelvetrees portraying the title role, played the theatre Kuehn contacted one of his neighborhood drug stores on a tie-up on the picture. The druggist agreed to furnish—and did—5,000 samples of face powder which were enclosed in small envelopes carrying copy relative to the theatre and the store and distributed at theatre and drugstore. They made quite a hit with the women of the neighborhood. Kuehn didn't shell out a cent, all of the advertising and printing being paid for by the druggist.

This tie-up was followed by another on the vaudeville show running with "Millie." The headline act was Doctor Rockwell and the vaude comic made up a number of heralds plugging his act. The druggist distributed 5,000 of them at the store. They went like hot cakes, as they were amusingly written. That's what Rudy is doing along the lines of merchandise promotion. Keep your eye on the Club pages and see what else he is doing.

Quint Keeps An Eye On Kid Biz. To See That It Hits Mark

In his town, Marshall E. Quint, manager of the Colonial Theatre in Belfast, Maine, displays a lot of activity. And it's helped him plenty in getting additional business into the theatre.

Recently he started the serial, "The Indians Are Coming," and to give it proper plugging he placed a special banner outside of the theatre as an advance plug. The banner was constructed of compoboard and contained cut-out metallicized letters. To further stimulate interest a kid club was started, based on cards carrying an announcement to the effect that if all numbers on the cards the serial. Kids were given membership (designating chapters) were punched, a free pass would be given to the theatre. The kids were more than enthused over the idea.

Quint is a showman who has had quite a bit of experience in the show game. Since he is, as we said, active in his town, we are sure that he will keep us posted on his future work so that we can pass it along to the rest of the Club, and let the other showmen see what is going on up at this section of New England. Oke, Marshall?

Working with the owner, and noting how he buys, books, and sells his films, Mr. Becker should pick up quite a fund of information that will later help him to manage a house on his own hook. Keep us in touch with your work, Max, so that we can see how you are progressing.

C. MORELOCK handles the advertising for the Arcade Theatre in Cottage Grove, Oregon. In his official capacity, he supplies ideas that are directed towards bringing money into the box-office. He created some very effective program hangers, carrying the month's attractions at the theatre, that went over very well with the patrons of the house. We are sure that from time to time Mr. Morelock will keep us informed on his work so that we can pass it along.

BERNARD H. C. BUCHANAN is the manager of the Colonial Theatre, in Buffalo, N. Y. Located in a town of showselling possibilities, Mr. Buchanan is doubtless giving a lot of showmanship to his local public. We'd like to hear from you, Bernie, regarding your work so that we can pass it along to the rest of the club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ERNIE WILLIAMS manages the Aris Theatre in Erie, Pa. And he is a live-wire in his town, too. We are quite sure of it, as he promises to be an active member of the Club and keep us posted on the work he turns out. And listen, Ernie, when you send in your first contribution, include your photo with it, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TOM WALL manages the Modern Theatre in Boston, Mass. And he manages it in a modern manner! Tom recently effected an excellent tie-up with a local university and grabbed off for himself a flock of publicity. He's going to be a live-wire, so we are giving you a tip to keep your eye on Wall. Let's have a photo of yourself, Tom.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY H. GOLDBERG is the assistant manager of the Modern Theatre in Boston, Mass. He assists Tom Wall in selling shows at the house. We know that since Tom is active, Harry will be likewise. Oke, Harry, and it's certainly going to help a lot towards you getting a house of your own to handle some day. Keep us posted.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. L. SILVERMAN is the manager of the New Palmer and the Strand Theatre in Palmer, Mass. Though he is doubtless busy with two houses to look after, we are of the opinion that he will find time to sit down and give us an account of what he does to keep both houses filled. Are we right, "M. L."?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NAT HOLT of the Miller Theatre in Wichita, Kas., is no stranger to the Club pages. His work, especially on shorts—which have made for him quite a name—has appeared on our pages before and has been passed along. We are glad to welcome Nat into the Club and we look forward to some very interesting show selling slants from him.

LEONARD A. SILVERMAN is the manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y. We have already had some samples of the type of work fashioned in this upstate city, so we know that its showman are right up-to-the-minute. Since we believe that Leonard wants to keep right out front with the rest of the showmen from his territory, his work will be found often on our pages. Oke, Leonard, it's alright with us.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAT McSWAIN is the assistant manager of the Carolina Theatre, in Durham, N. C. We have already enrolled a good many showmen from Mr. McSwain's state, and we are pleased to extend him a welcome. Keep us in touch with your work, Pat, so that we can show how you are progressing in your show selling and how you help the showman handling the house sell his shows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD C. SPENGEMAN is the resident manager of the Warren Park Theatre in Front Royal, Va. He has been in the show game for quite some time, and is quite well informed on the various methods of showselling. The Warren Park is a neat little house situated in a part of Virginia that permits of showselling. Welcome, Ed, and remember to keep us informed on your work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOSEPH F. KENNEDY is the manager of Loew's Warwick Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y. We want to extend Joe a welcome into the Club and give him a membership along with that of the rest of the up-to-the-minute showmen from the Loew circuit. But listen, Joe, if you want to keep right along the front line with the rest of the gang, you'll have to be pretty active on our pages. As your first contribution, how about a photo and a little dope on yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARL F. HERMANN manages the Roosevelt Theatre in Scranton, Pa. In the past, Mr. Hermann's town has boasted a reputation for fine showmanship. How it is going now, we are not informed. However, Carl, you can set us right by shooting in some of your recent work so that we can pass it along to the rest of the members of the Managers' Round Table Club. What do you say? And include your photo, too!

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES!

Floyd D. Morrow

In his official capacity as advertising manager for a newspaper, Morrow used to write ads for the theatre account. He did it for some time. Then it became a habit with him, and he decided that he liked writing theatre ads better than he did being advertising manager. He resigned his position and started in the show game by leasing a theatre in Fairmont, West Va.

He was 21 years old when he entered the show game in 1917 as owner and manager of the Grand Opera House in Fairmont, West Va. Since then he has done this: Been in the World War, attached to air service; managed the Nelson Theatre, after the war, in Fairmont, West Va.; publication manager of the Palace Theatre, Washington, Pa.; owner and manager of the Regent Theatre, Washington, Pa.; manager of the Downtown State Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.; publicity director of four theatres for the Columbus Amusement Company, New Kensington, Pa.; owner and manager of the Palace Theatre, Tarentum, Pa.; general manager of the five-house "L" Theatre Circuit in Cincinnati, Ohio; city manager for Paramount-Publix. of two theatres, in Marion, Ohio; manager of Warner Brothers' Sherman Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio. And now recently promoted to city manager for Warners at Portsmouth, Ohio.

Morrow was born in Fairmont, West Va., and educated in the town's grammar and high school. He is well known in Fairmont and well liked by all of its residents. It was here that he started his theatrical career, and no place was more interested in learning of his recent promotion than the home-towners. An active showman, Morrow's work has often been represented on the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club, and that it will be continued is quite certain. He is married. His lodge membership is in the Elks. If he could pick a profession all over again he would choose the show game.

Herbert D. Grove

He's known to nearly every one as "Herb." He was born in Des Moines, Ia., educated there, and there received his first start in the show game. He entered the amusement field with a determination to become a projectionist. He became a projectionist: in the first picture house in Des Moines. A nickelodeum.

But shortly after Herb entered the booth, the house went vaudeville. And out went Herb. He next took a position as doorman and janitor in a small outlying theatre. But this wasn't for long. He soon obtained another job as projectionist at the Family Theatre in Des Moines. He remained there seven years. This was followed by three years as manager-projectionist of the Casino Theatre in Davenport, Ia. During this time he supervised construction and electrical work of a new theatre in Davenport and two in Des Moines. Then the war, and Herb's enlistment.

For eighteen months Herb was overseas, in France and Germany. While in Germany he was given supervision over movie entertainment in nine towns, as well as taking care of equipment in fourteen towns each week. After the war he went back to Des Moines and a job supervising electrical equipment at the then being built Des Moines Theatre. When the house opened he was made electrician, then assistant manager and, finally, manager. Job after job followed and in March, 1930, he was made district manager for Publix in Rock Island. He attended the Publix District Managers' School. In August, 1930, the district was eliminated and Herb was given his present spot as Manager of the Fort Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., and city manager of Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline.

Herb is married and has two children. His lodge affiliations are: the Masons (32nd Degree), the Shriners, the Rotary Club, the American Legion, and the Rainbow Division Society.

H. M. Addison

If a privileged man for a circus hadn't been living in the same house as H. M. Addison, the now managing director of Loew's and United Artists Penn Theatre in Pittsburgh, Pa., wouldn't have entered the show business. Addison was slated to become a medico, and to insure that objective being accomplished, his parents sent him, at the age of 10, to become an errand boy for a local doctor, figuring that in time Addison would grow right into the profession. But the doctor went to Pittsburgh and took Addison with him. It was in Pittsburgh that Fate in the guise of the privilege man stepped into the picture and blasted all hopes (if he had any) of Addison becoming a doctor.

Addison offered to help the peanut and popcorn concessionnaire, and from then on it was the amusement racket. And when the privilege man, later on, stepped out, Addison picked up the concession. It wasn't long before he made a success of it. Thirty kids worked for him at one stage of the game. Next for Addison was a road show, of which he was appointed assistant manager—in title, and not in authority. His real position was errand boy. Still a break came. It became necessary for Addison to steer the show back East when the manager fell ill. His reputation was then made. Then at twenty he managed the Shubert Theatre, in Utica, New York.

He has since worked for Shubert, Klaw and Erlanger, O. S. Hathaway, Wilmer and Vincent, Fox, RKO, and Loew. He has managed houses in Reading, Pa.; in Utica and Binghamton, N. Y.; in Buffalo and Rochester, N. Y.; in Norfolk and Newport News, Va., and in York and Pittsburgh, Pa. He was born in Hawthorn, Pa., and educated, he says, in the school of hard knocks. He is married and has three children. He is a member of many lodges, including four honorary memberships in the Shrine.

Nathan Hoffman

His first movie experience was with one of those things that you look into and turn a crank (after putting in a penny), and see "Three Old Maids," a French farce. And such machines, in those days, flourished in but two places —amusement parks and penny arcades. It was in the latter place that Hoffman worked. As penny distributor!

From this, his first contact with the public, he graduated into the real end of show business. But not until after he had finished school. He wisely figured that he needed the education first; show business second. The years rolled on, as is their custom, and Hoffman got deeper and deeper into the show business. He became interested in Hoffman's Theatre Corp. The houses he has managed and been financially interested in are the Regent in Arlington, Mass.; the Broadway and Orpheum in Somerville, Mass.; the Home in Everett, and the Columbia in Boston, Mass. He served as general manager of the houses.

In all of these houses he has displayed a brand of live-wire and up-to-the-minute showmanship. Like other showmen who are progressive, he is always willing to learn, and you can bank on it that he is picking up new knowledge daily that enables him the better to sell his shows.

Hoffman was born in Boston and educated in the Paul Revere Grammar School; Northeastern High School; Boston University's School of Business Administration, and Boston U's Law School. With this background he has forged ahead in the show game, and is now operating the Brooklyn Theatre in Los Angeles, Cal. Hoffman is married and has four children. His lodge and fraternal organizations are: Bostonians of Los Angeles; Phi Delta Tou law fraternity: Elks; Masons, and the Shriners. He has always liked show business and he hopes to stay in it. More power to him!

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

STORM LAKE, IA.

DEAR HERALD:

The robins are here, the boys are playing marbles in the streets and that's a sure sign that spring has returned, and this brings to us the suggestion that now is the time to go down in the basement and dig up that paint brush and some fresh paint and get out front and doll the old show house up a bit.

There is no place in the world where paint will return as large a dividend as out in front of your theatre. A theatre should always be the brightest spot in town, and it should be a place to invite PEOPLE rather than LIVESTOCK. You can get a man's measure more accurately by the looks of the front of his theatre than you can in any other way. If you will show us the front of a theatre we can tell you 99 times out of 100 whether that manager is taking a trade journal or not.

To illustrate this: We drove into a town in Illinois some time ago to call on the theatreman. We inquired for him and he was pointed out to us, and when we introduced ourself, he said: "Well, what the ——— do you want?" We told him we were not sure we wanted anything, but that we represented (or tried to) the Exhibitors Herald and we would like to take a look at his theatre.

As we started down the street toward his theatre, he began to curse the film salesmen and everybody else connected with the business for taking up his time, and just as we arrived at the theatre, a couple of little girls came along and one of them asked what the show was going to be that night, and he replied: "There it is; can't you read anything; what's the matter with you?" And he pointed to a one sheet standing in front of the box office window. We went into the house and took one glance at the surroundings.

The floor of the aisles and lobby were littered with paper, popcorn boxes and cigarettes, and when we came out he said to us: "Well, what are you going to say about my theatre in your ——— magazine?" And we replied: "We are not going to say anything about your theatre, for you haven't any theatre. You may think you have, and whoever told you you have a theatre must have pulled a fast one on you, for it's so chilly around here that this dump suggests a cold storage plant, and if we were in your place we'd forget about pictures and go to buying dressed chickens to store in here and then all you will need will be the market quotations on dressed poultry."

Then we got into our car and drove out of town as quick as we could for we wanted to be out of reach by the time that soaked in.

There are not so very many theatremen like that chap, but what few there are are altogether too many. The finest theatres in the world have streaks of bad business at times, but there are too many who fail to take an invoice of themselves. If they did, they would find, in many cases, that the fault would lie with themselves in not keeping their theatres attractive and comfortable. How's that paint brush of yours; have you got one?

Some years ago, we found a theatre in a town with a tall pole standing out in front of it with an electric light on top of it. We asked the manager what that light was for up there and he said it was a signal light; that when the people saw that light burning they knew he had a show. That guy must have been a lighthouse keeper before he went into the show business, and it is to be hoped that that signal light kept him from going on the rocks. You know how molasses around the bunghole of a barrel will draw flies! Well, your theatre front is the bunghole of this business, and if you don't put some molasses in the shape of fresh paint around it, you are not going to draw many flies. We will give you just two weeks from today to "doll up" that theatre front, and that's more time than you ought to have.

Oh, Yeah!

HURRAH! There are some hopes for Chicago now. Mayor Thompson's cabinet has resigned. We knew something like that would happen as soon as Jay and George left there and went down to New York with the Herald.

Winnie From Iowa

Everytime we cross the Missouri river into Iowa it starts raining. As soon as we hit the Iowa end of the bridge the other day, it began to cloud up and by the time we got to La Mars, it began raining and has kept it up ever since, and last night it turned into snow and this morning there is a blizzard raging outside (!) and we are going to stay inside.

Whenever Iowa needs rain all that is necessary to get it is to send for us. The Iowa legislature is in session and if they wanted to do the square thing they would pass an appropriation giving us a pension for life, but they won't do it. That's always been the trouble with Iowa. Being as close to Nebraska as she is, it would seem that they would learn something after a while. She used to have mud holes in her highways until Nebraska made her ashamed of herself, and now she has about the best road system of any state in the union, which shows that Nebraska has finally had some influence on her.

There is this we must say for Iowa: She's the corn crib and the hog pen of the world. Without her corn and hogs, her butter and poultry, there would be a lot more people go hungry than there are. If they would lift Iowa and Nebraska up and sit them down in Europe, the ships coming this way would carry more corn and dressed pork than they would people. There is one thing very noticeable about Iowa: too many of her people live in Long Beach, Cal. If it weren't for Iowa, Long Beach would still be a whistling post, and what would Los Angeles be if it weren't for Nebraska? Jevver think about that?

Iowa has turned out some very prominent people, among them being Winnie Lightner. And, speaking of Winnie, have you seen her latest picture with Joe Brown, "SIT TIGHT"? We haven't, but we will risk half of our weekly salary, or $7.50, that it's a good one. We never saw Winnie do anything yet that she didn't do just about right.

Spring Is Here

Everytime we come to Iowa it either rains or snows.
The wind sweeps down from Canada and blows and blows and blows.
It makes the farmers all feel gay
For they know they'll have both corn and hay,
And they all join in and shout, Hurray!
In the state where the tall corn grows.

Did you ever ponder on the life of a columnist? A columnist is one with but little present, no future, but lots of past. When we first began to take life seriously, we wanted to be a railroad engineer. Then we decided to become a lawyer, but people with judgment dissuaded us from making that mistake. Then we looked with favor upon the ministry but we found that ministerial clothes didn't fit us very good, so we gradually drifted from one thing to another until we finally landed in the theatre business right at a time when the field was opening up for bootleggers.

That just shows what luck a columnist has; always choosing the wrong profession. Had we sensed the opportunities that would open up to people with ability after the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, we might have had our name on the front page of every daily in the land, but now look at us! Just a columnist whom nobody loves. Just a target for ripe tomatoes, or sawed-off shotguns, depending upon the state of mind of the individual.

We told a fellow once that we believed there were other columnists who were very nearly as bad as we are and he said that was impossible; that we were crazy. We left before the doctor had all the bones set, which reminds us that now is a good time to quit while you can control yourselves.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 103, No. 2 — April 11, 1931

Positively All Talk

ANENT the observation in Mr. Martin Quigley's discussion of "The Code or Censorship" in which he recorded that a great many persons have heard of the Production Code and very few, of those who should, have read it, one is painfully reminded that the motion picture industry in general operates to a most amazing degree on word of mouth, whispers, and guesses and hearsays.

There appears to be a widespread reluctance to indulge in the exercise of the use of the visual imagination in the translation of printed words into mental pictures. Motion picture executives tend to insist on conversation and verbal report. The motion picture industry is conspicuously an extravagant user of the long distance telephone. Two hour conversations with Hollywood are held many times a day in many offices and the telephone to Paris is a commonplace in film offices. The motion picture was a talking business long before sound came to the films.

And along with this dependence on the spoken word has developed a curious inattention to the maintenance of archives and records, and a habit of ignoring those which do exist.

Records and statistics have been slow in coming into the world of the motion picture, slower probably than in any other great industry. The dearth of adequate statistical information is reflected in the large eagerness with which banks and financial publications have reached for the graphs, the box office reports and the business charts which have more recently been made a regular feature of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Also no day passes in which the HERALD is not asked by telegram or telephone for facts that stand before the inquirers in the pages of MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC. Written and printed words of letter and book are tools which the motion picture industry can find useful.

A Brighter Tomorrow

THE sympathy of the whole world of the motion picture goes out to Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Warner in their grief at the passing of their son Lewis. The house of Warner has indeed experienced a mingling of triumphs and tragedies. For the grief that comes with death, let condoling friends strive as they will, there is no real balm but time and that healing afterglow of memories that survive the days of bitter despair. May those days pass swiftly for the Warners.

Naming the Rose

IN these days while the picture program makers are all a-froth about titles, there is reassurance in recalling that few if any of the great outstanding screen successes have been aided by especially appealing titles. "The Clansman" was a better title than its successor, "The Birth of a Nation," which had no more box office promise than "The Fall of Rome." "Quo Vadis" did well in its day when most of the customers would have thought it was the name of a cigar. "The Covered Wagon" did its best business where they had never heard of one. No one will insist that "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" gave the millions of the mass a 24-sheet thrill.

Experience shows that in the main the picture makes the title. However, there can be no harm in intelligent or even smart titles. They make excellent conversational material. It is curiously evident that sales executives do a tremendous lot more laboring about titles than consideration of story material. There often appears to be a vague hope that some way production in Hollywood will make good on the titles concocted in New York. Hollywood has a way of being independent about such matters.

One highly effective promoter of motion pictures of long experience observed over the luncheon table the other day that it would be much better for the whole industry if the annual announcements of program could merely list productions by number, leaving the titles to be written after the pictures were made. That, however, would tend to establish a relation between the picture and the title, which would upset tradition.

The Laemmle Story

"THE Life and Adventures of Carl Laemmle," by John Drinkwater, is published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, this week. It presents in its 300 pages an intensely human and sometimes exciting story of one of the motion picture's most interesting careers. Through the drama of the life of Mr. Laemmle one sees a vivid cross-section of many phases of the evolution of the business organism of the motion picture.

In a foreword tribute to the founder of Universal, Will Hays writes: "The pioneers of the screen were fired by the same vision that beckons men to the conquest of wilderness in territory or in thought. But the true pioneer is a dreamer, not a drudge. He struggles but to create. He dares but to achieve. Of such stuff and with such vision is Carl Laemmle."

Mr. Drinkwater's work is a distinct contribution to the growing library of the literature of the motion picture.

Style Is the Issue

OUR dignity has been outraged by Mr. Jay Emanuel, editorializing in "The Exhibitor" concerning MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S observations on the word "substitution," when he writes: "If, then, as the HERALD says, pictures may be likened to gowns and hats, can it be assumed that women will accept a pair of cotton panties for a silk gown which was contracted for a year previously?" We protest that in our high minded manner we made metaphor of gowns and hats, and when Mr. Emanuel comes in with cotton panties in his hand he is raising a very different question. But we dare the opinion that if the silk dress were last year's model and the cottons the new season's creation by M. Poiret the panties would win, and that goes for the picture parallel, too.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

TRUE romance item: About twenty years ago when a certain publicity man now of fame in the industry was a dashing, flashing gallant of a young reporter on a great newspaper in New York, he got entangled in a decidedly wet party and found himself at the dawn in what was then called a cabaret.

It was an hour of much mellowness and susceptibility. Across the room She sat. She was a lovely bit of beauty, only slightly disarrayed by the night of wine and dance. It was love at sight and no questions asked. Impulses like that come sometimes at the pink edge of dawn, especially when there has been a purple and hectic night behind.

In tears our Hero repented his dissolute life. Here was his ideal, his dream girl, his, etc., etc. He told her so. In telling her so he accumulated a gallery of interested and equally mellow friends.

"You love the girl, see—why don't you get married—just like that—it'd be swell."

With a grandiose gesture of profound gallantry and tender consideration the young man gravely proposed, in the presence of the gathering, and was accepted on the spot.

There was a round of drinks, perhaps two rounds. Then all hands were off in a fleet of taxicabs for such matters as licenses and a marrying magistrate.

Within two hours the strangers of dawn were made man-and-wife.

The sun was getting up in the sky and the bride-of-the-morning was weary. Her gallant husband emerged from the magistrates office with her and drove her forthwith to her home, kissing her hand in adieu at her home.

Thence the groom went to join his friends again at the caravanserie to make merry with the bowl.

It was mid afternoon in his apartment when the raucous telephone jangled him awake. He sat up and held a throbbing head. The voice on the wire said in words and figures substantially as follows: "I'm that girl's brother and your a damned scoundrel to marry her like that and you've got to let her get an annulment right away—and so on and on."

The Hero could not well remember—but he pieced together bits of the sequence of the night before as they rose from the mists of alcohol. Indeed it was true there had been some sort of a fuss at the city hall and maybe—well yes in fact he had been married, but he wasn't sure just about to whom or the details.

"Oh, go on and get the old annulment, I'm sleepy," he answered the phone. Then he filled a pitcher with cold water and put it beside the bed.

Many years elapsed and the young reporter, young no longer, was sitting at a publicity desk in a West Coast studio.

His phone rang and the production manager for the establishment announced: "I'm sending over Miss———, to give you the dope for some publicity items. She's a swell jane and be sure and give her a break. I think she'll make the grade out here."

Presently the beautiful lady was admitted. There was a considerable consultation about photographs and a large array of notes on stories and copy was made.

Then in a diffident manner the publicity man looked up. "I'm sorry, but I just didn't quite get your name," he said.

She stood up in a whimsical silence for a long minute.

"And, really, you don't remember me?" She smiled, and also pouted.

The publicity man flushed and puzzled.

"No—sorry, but I'm afraid I don't."

"Why—you married me one morning in New York, years ago."

They had dinner together that night. Soon they were married, again. And marvelously enough, they have been happy in all the several years since.

"True-Shot Mike" Goes Blind

The weekly efficiency story: The big nickel-and-dime saver on the staff of a widely known distributing concern took a look about the building the other day and in a gust of enthusiasm decided he could dispense entirely with one floor which could then be leased to an outside tenant. His moving squad came at the gallop with the dollies to skid the desk out and the place was cleared in a jiffy. The partition wrecking crew was just about to go to work when the big economy executive heard sounds from behind a door in the corner. He investigated and found that he had overlooked the company's telephone exchange. A call to the telephone company's service department disclosed the fact that it would cost more to move the switchboard and rewire than could be had in rental for the floor for two years. All moves were reversed and another day was spent in moving desks back. Meanwhile two costly departments were out of business for two days and it will take another month to restore morale.

The moral is that efficiency and idea men in the motion picture industry should not be permitted to shoot from the hip. In a crowded industry the innocent bystanders always get hit.

IT was one of those gala nights in Hollywood with another grand world premiere. The canopy was bedecked with two thousand orchids. There were bands playing. There were empty cameras grinding. There was a flaming glare of endless lights and the throb of many motor-generator sets. Flashlights were popping as newsmen, or imitation newsmen, dashed about. It was a big night staged for Her by Him, about her picture and through his money.

"Death Valley Scotty," blue shirted and informal, stood by regarding the manifestations. Presently we cut out of the crowd and went over to pass the time of the evening with a friendly traffic officer.

"This convinces me," observed the dry "Scotty," "that both Barnum and Darwin were right."

Grabbing the Credit

The artists' agents of Hollywood are some where near the top of the in-bad list in the industry these days. The rumblings of a rising tide of disapproval are to be heard in many quarters. All too often it has happened that the agent has been able to dash in and claim his 10 per cent on engagements to be classified as breaks with which he could not conceivably have had anything to do.

What Price Fame?

Fame has its troubles. Frank Wilstach, editorial functionary at the Hays office, between labors for that esteemed organization and the writing of books, also collects similes, publishing an annual summary as, for instance, "The Best Similes of 1931." A year ago he included one of the bon mots of Percy Hammond, dramatic critic of the New York Tribune. The other day Mr. Hammond, meeting Mr. Wilstach on Forty-second street, protested: "Take me out of that damn list. Do you know it cost me $9 this year paying for clippings the bureaus sent in on it?"

Play 'Em or Leave 'Em

Chicago (QP)—Joe Vergesslich, new Warner manager from New York, thinks Chicago's protection and release system is an improvement over New York's because here you have to either play them or pass them up for the next in line, whereas New York exhibitors, under their system, may procrastinate indefinitely if they are so minded.

Albert and John Do Not Agree on Relative Values

Hollywood—And now that Professor Einstein is back home in Germany, the story of his Hollywood tilt with John Barrymore may be told. It was a great battle.

Barrymore, wearing frowsy make-up, was notified one morning that Einstein was to be the luncheon guest of Jack Warner and other studio officials. Barrymore was asked to attend.

He replied, according to Photoplay, that he was not sure whether he could, in view of his make-up and "shooting" conditions, and he sent to the dining room a picture of himself with the request that the scientist autograph it.

Meanwhile Einstein had arrived and explained that his time was so brief he would not be able to visit all stages. In view of the circumstances, he asked that Barrymore attend the luncheon for the purpose of meeting him. That is said to have riled the Barrymore temper.

"He said a lot of things about Einstein, to the effect that if Einstein couldn't come to the Barrymore stage, Barrymore would be so-and-so if he'd go to the Einstein lunch," it is stated. Then Einstein declined to autograph the Barrymore picture!

At this juncture, a technician on the Barrymore set hastened over to the lunch room and when Einstein came out, presented his autograph book.

Einstein took it.

Frau Einstein took it out of the professor's hands. "No, enough today," she said. Crestfallen, the autograph-seeker returned to the lot and Barrymore heard the tale.

The actor ordered that Einstein be not allowed on the set.

So Einstein didn't meet Barrymore, and Barrymore didn't meet Einstein.

So that's that.

Wall Street Becomes More Interested in Pictures

30 Millions from Debenture Issue, 15 Millions to Aid Wesco and 28 for Transfer of Loew's

Fox refinancing is set!

Harley L. Clarke, president of Fox Films, emerged triumphant this week in his battle with one of the toughest financial markets of history to secure permanent financing for Fox Film and allied interests.

With acquisition of adequate funds to retire Fox's $55,000,000 one-year 6% secured gold note issue, maturing on April 15, many of the country's leading banking institutions assume a more intimate and active interest in the standing structure of motion picture corporate and business activities, particularly as they affect Fox-Loew-Wesco and their holdings.

When the annual stockholders' meeting is held on April 15, the following, all representing important financial interests, will be added to the directorate:

ALBERT H. WIGGIN, chairman of the governing board of the Chase National Bank.

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, capitalist.

PHILIP STOCKTON, president of the First National Bank, Boston.

PHILIP R. CLARKE, president of the Central Trust Co. of Illinois, Chicago.

FRANK O. WATTS, chairman of the board of directors of the First

2,000 Ft. Reels Taboo

Terrific expense of adopting 2,000 ft. reels in place of the present 1,000 ft. standard will prevent a change-over indefinitely, according to Sam Katz, Publix chief, who cites entire revamping of exchange systems, rebuilding of vaults, installation of new film inspection layouts, larger shipping cases, and, in fact, a new exchange set-up, as reasons for preventing a switch to the long form of reel.

Dreiser Would Make a Couple Of "Tragedies"

Hollywood—Terseness of treatment is revealed in a copyrighted Los Angeles Herald yarn, as the basic objection of Theodore Dreiser to Paramount's scenario for "An American Tragedy."

Dreiser held out on film offers for many years because he believed "They can't even begin to suggest the psychology of 'An American Tragedy' in a motion picture of ordinary length."

And sure enough, no sooner had Paramount submited the scenario for Dreiser's okay than the novelist bellowed loud and long on the limited treatment.

He immediately rushed to Hollywood and demanded a lengthier theatment.

At the studio, Dreiser was received very "courteously," he said, but did not indicate to what extent Paramount had conceded to his point—if at all.

An earlier scenario prepared by S. M. Eisenstein, Russian director, thoroughly met with his approval. It called for many more reels, and probably would have resulted in Paramount releasing the feature in two sections, a la Von Stroheim.

Dreiser threatens to ask an injunction restraining Paramount from showing the picture version of his "An American Tragedy" and to seek an equity ruling defining the rights of authors unless the version is "perfectly satisfactory," says the Los Angeles Examiner. The newspaper quotes Dreiser as saying Paramount paid $150,000 for the rights and that "when I read the script I went into a trance."

"Tragedy" Not Right Yet

Hollywood—Several of the "American Tragedy" sequences are said to fall short of the production Code of Ethics requirements, though the script was reported passed by Will Hays. New sequences may be shot, though the film is near completion. Meanwhile, Theodore Dreiser has agreed to await previewing of the completed picture before suggesting any changes.

THE WRITER IN HOLLYWOOD

The situation in the studios today finds the authors preparing a "bill of rights" to present to producers

By LEO MEEHAN

A STANDARD form of contract for writers and probably a standardized code of practices seem to be the next important development in production circles as a result of preliminary meetings which have been held in Hollywood recently under the auspices of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences.

Furthermore, it is not venturesome to predict that a similar development quickly follow, or even go along almost simultaneously, with the directors. While the latter have not yet taken anything resembling organized action, discussions among important directors would indicate the likelihood of their seeking the assistance of the Academy in working out an agreement with producers.

The standard form contract for actors, drafted after many conferences with the producers, has now been in operation a year. It is believed to have given general satisfaction to all concerned in the majority of cases. It is conceded to be a document which has eliminated much grief and argument both for the actor and the producer.

Should a standard contract be developed for the writer and for the director, then there would be an almost complete understanding of many vexing questions arising in the creative—and expensive—branches of motion picture production. And since the Academy seems to have done a successful job for the actors, the writers and directors are now indicating an earnest desire to have it act as intermediary to extend such practices to their professions.

Under the chairmanship of Alfred A. Cohn, head of the writers' branch of the Academy, a meeting of writers was held last week at the Writers Club in Hollywood. While the meeting was sponsored by the Academy, it was not limited to Academy members. It was the most representative meeting, possibly, ever held by writers connected with the studios. Not only were all the major studios represented by writers, but there were notable stage playwrights and prominent writers of fiction as well.

As at similar gatherings held previously, the discussions covered a wide field. Some discussed personalities, others discussed companies. But a sincere effort was made by the leaders to guide the discussions toward principles and away from personalities. It was the consensus that a representative committee could best draft a preliminary form of contract, this to be submitted later for general consideration and final consideration and final action.

Mr. Cohn was therefore instructed to appoint a committee, to include a writer from each of the major studios, and that this committee proceed to draft recommendations which will be submitted to another general meeting of writers to be held on April 23. Following are the members of the committee announced by Mr. Cohn, who will be ex-officio members of it:

John Meehan, Percy Heath, Frank Woods, Barney Glazer, Richard Schayer, Waldemar Young and Howard Estabrook. This committee will begin outlining a program during the present week, to be presented at the next general meeting.

Out of the numerous informal talks and comments made by prominent writers present, there seemed to be quite general agreement that the quality of picture stories could not and will not be improved until such a time as writers are given more freedom, more recognition of the importance of story, and less domination by studio executives.

The opinion was freely stated that unless the quality of motion picture stories was quickly improved, taking product as a whole, the industry would suffer as severe a loss of patronage from the public as it experienced just before the advent of sound. In other words, it was the belief of the writers that the novelty of sound which revived patronage had worn off; that the public was again shopping, and refused to spend money on inferior product.

It was expressly stated by a number of writers that their purpose was not to create dissention, but rather to help build toward better product and consequently increased patronage. This they believed could be done if a clearer understanding was reached as to the duties and purposes of the writer, in contrast to those of executives, supervisors, directors and others having a hand in the making of pictures.

Elmer Rice, who was among the speakers, pointed to the experiences of the Dramatists Guild as a result of the drafting of a standard contract form now in use between them and the New York stage producers. He granted that there were differences in the problems involved as to screen writing, but expressed the belief that the fundamental principles involved were the same, and said he was confident the same happy results could be achieved in the field of motion picture writing if the whole matter was intelligently threshed out and crystallized as to conditions, recognition, payments and various other practices.

The writers are unanimous in their belief that the introduction of sound has made their work of much greater importance. They hold that no longer can a picture be said to be a "director's picture" or an "actor's picture" but that story development, dialogue, treatment and the like must be

By WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

THE writers of Hollywood are getting ready a bill of rights to present to the producers. Their magna charta, say the writers, is designed not merely to help themselves but, principally, to help motion pictures.

Which sounds very logical. Pictures at present cannot be greatly improved until the writing of them is improved.

The producers say—and undoubtedly with all sincerity—that the writer is the important individual in production today. But that remains considerably more of a theory than a fact. And so it will remain until the studios adapt themselves to the writer and stop trying to adapt the writer to the studio.

Picture production, in these days of the talkers, is a good deal like stage production; necessarily so. And, in stage production, the wheels don't move at all until a play comes out of the blue sky.

Writing is an intangible thing. You cannot buy it as you would buy silk—for a price. It isn't altogether a matter of money. Writers have come to Hollywood, enjoyed fat salaries, made motions of working and saved the real children of their brains and taken them away for the stage or the magazines. Cheaters you may call them, but that doesn't get to the bottom of things.

To begin with—the best within the writer does not blossom forth until he is in mental and emotional travail. And he won't sweat like this without mighty good reason.

There is one thing a writer wants, deserves and will have—and that is full credit publicity, fame if such it becomes, for the thing he creates.

That—mostly that—is what spurs him on. Hollywood will not get far with the writer until the studios stop diverting the full credit due him to the director, supervisor, associate producer,—or worse still, to some other writer who is a cousin of somebody. That is deadly.

Again, writers are not designed to be—and never have been—cogs of a machine. The best in them cannot be had out of the pressure of rules and rontine. And if their efforts are to be made subservient to stars or to any other studio assets and departments, well and good—but don't expect too much of any creative work set in motion to meet such ends.

Another thing: stories cannot be blacksmithed into shape any more than they can be blackjacked into being. Story conferences, it seems to me, are apt to be poisonous affairs. They may be valiant occasions for every one present; but pity the story and its creator!

I was once the humble member of the staff of a magazine whose editor (self-

SCREEN ADVERTISING GOES TO TRIAL ON 3000 SCREENS IN ALLIED DEAL

General Looks for Credit Data on Conn, and Conn Starts After Ditto on General; Result: Amazing

There's an amusing yarn going the rounds involving Jacob Conn, the militant exhibitor from Providence, who, after contracting with General Talking Pictures for DeForest sound equipment, was deluged by a flood of credit investigators, all prying into his financial affairs and credit status before okehing installation of the equipment.

All of which made "Jake" plenty "hot" under the collar. "Why," he reasoned, "should they snoop around my business and delve into my credit affairs? I know little or nothing about the credit of General, but there's nothing to stop me now from getting the low-down on that organization," or words to that effect.

Conn, as a result, started an investigation of his own. But, nowhere in banking circles could he find a line on General. Conn did not know that the Schlesingers, who control General-DeForest, avoid the listing of credit data in the U. S.

Conn, however, enlisted the services of seven prominent banks, and after a long and exhaustive search found credit of the Schlesingers to be satisfactory. Very much so, as a matter of fact, inasmuch as the investigating banks found the combined wealth of the Schlesinger interests to be somewhere between $200,000,000 and $250,000,000, principally in South Africa.

Clarke Going to London This Month To Talk Expansion

London—The proposed London visit of Harley L. Clarke late this month will involve new Fox expansion plans in Europe, it is believed here by insiders, who also expect Clarke to discuss the present indebtedness of the company to British banking interests in connection with Fox's theatre holdings in England.

Hammons to Confer With Film Leaders On Product

Hollywood—When E. W. Hammons, Educational president, arrives from New York after completing arrangements to take over Tiffany, he will confer with Phil Goldstone, Tiffany's studio chief, and production executives of both companies regarding product and policy for 1931-32.

At the same time, Hammons is expected to iron out reported differences between Goldstone and Tiffany. Goldstone is said to have made several attempts to quit since Emil Jensen, his candidate for buyer of Tiffany, failed to negotiate purchase of the company.

Details of the Educational-Tiffany deal were definitely worked out Thursday. Only a few minor hitches remain to be settled.

E. W. Hammons, Educational president, and Grant L. Cook, executive chief of Tiffany, under President L. A. Young, leave for Hollywood in a few days.

Beacom Slated For Saul Rogers' Fox Law Post

Saul Rogers will be succeeded by Harold Beacom as general counsel of Fox Film on May 1, it is understood.

Beacom, a member of Winston, Strawn & Shaw, Chicago law firm, returns to New York from a honeymoon in Bermuda on Sunday. Beacom's law organization, probably the most outstanding in Chicago, serves as one of Harley L. Clarke's legal advisors on his public utility interests.

It is understood Beacom joins Fox under a five year contract and that Rogers, under terms of his agreement, still has four years to go.

One-half of Association's Theatres Booking

First Large Scale Direct Test of Merchandising Invasion Now to Go Before Box Office Public

Not less than three thousand of the six thousand screens of the members of the Allied States Association are to be involved in what is to be the most extensive and intensive endeavor to make the motion picture theatre an instrument of paid advertising in the general merchandising field, in competition with radio and the press.

The machinery of production and distribution is now being set up in the project by which Kinograms, a silent newsreel of varying fortunes operating from 1919 until last January, becomes the vehicle of advertising, delivered to the public through Allied Theatres.

Is First Real Trial

This will constitute the first reel trial on a large scale of the advertising on the theatre screen idea in terms which will permit a positive choice and decision by the theatre managements. The considerable distribution of advertising pictures which has thus far occupied the speculative attention of the industry has been through circuits where the will of a New York home office was superimposed on the local management.

In the opinion of some of the more important executives of the industry, all of whom, however, are reluctant about public expression, the advertising picture and the endeavor of merchandisers to get before amusement seeking audiences presents an issue of the utmost seriousness. One of the keenest sales executives in the business holds that the advertising picture is fraught with tremendously destructive probabilities. Others, including notably persons of more recent acquisition of power, point to the radio as a promising precedent of public acceptance.

Developing Sales Machinery

Now it appears the Allied theatres are to supply the crucible of experience, with Kinograms, a resuscitated silent reel with sound strip accompaniment, as the channel of delivery.

Kinograms will confine itself exclusively to the production of the reel and space selling to national advertising accounts, while Allied's various state units will set up a sales organization, with 100 to 120 salesmen, to sell the reel, a twice weekly issue to theatres. In some states, Allied leaders will handle sales. A large number of the contracts, it is expected, will be negotiated at Allied meetings or directly through association headquarters.

Allied, it is understood, already has received between 1,600 to 1,800 signed con-

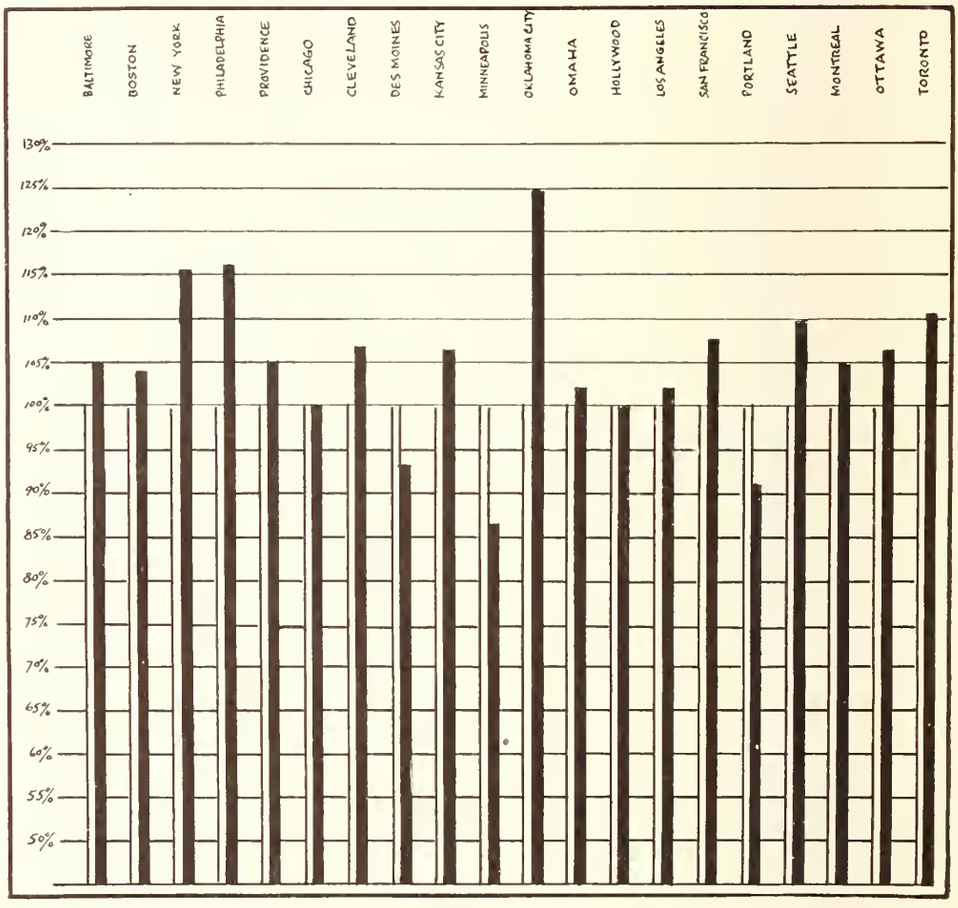
KANSAS THEATRES AWAIT DRASTIC OUSTER SUIT ON SUNDAY CLOSING

Wichita Group Launches Statewide Fight

Supreme Court Uniformly Has Approved Proceedings Based on Corporation Law Violations

Kansas City (QP)—Fox theatres of Kansas face the threat of an ouster suit unless they cease alleged violation of the Sunday labor laws, and similar action looms against other film organizations in various cities of the state where Sunday shows are being presented.



The proposed action against the Fox organization has its origin in Wichita. A group of business and professional men of that city met this week with Attorney General Boynton and discussed their plans to force Sunday closing in Wichita. At the conference the possible effects on showings in other cities of the state also were taken up.

Boynton, in a letter to George L. Adams, Sedgwick county attorney, held that a "limited ouster" proceeding would lie against Fox West Coast Theatres "if it controls shows which operate on Sunday in violation of the state law."

The state supreme court uniformly has approved limited or complete ouster proceedings in cases called to its attention in which a company has been found to have violated the state corporation or general laws. A survey of decisions of the court shows the tribunal very jealous of the requirements of the law on corporations in Kansas.

With Fox West Coast owning many houses in the state, some of them operating on Sundays, the plan of the Wichita group calls for the launching of ouster proceedings first against the parent organization, to be followed by additional actions against the individual units operating the local motion picture houses.

At the same time, members of the Wichita citizens' group said they had not planned to attempt an ousting of the entire Fox organization from the state, but would ask for a limited ouster order to prevent the company or any of its subsidiaries from presenting shows on Sundays, or otherwise violating the labor laws or any other state regulations. Leaders in the film trade, however, see the danger of the action going out of all bounds once it becomes a subject for court decision.

GROSSES TRAVEL UPWARD! Average theatre grosses for the first three months of 1931 showed an increase of from 5 per cent to 25 per cent over average grosses for the last 30 weeks of 1930. In only three of the 20 cities from which receipts were obtained was a decline noted, these three being Des Moines, Minneapolis and Portland. In the above chart the white uprights indicate the average gross for the last 30 weeks of 1930, while the black shows the average receipts for the first three months of this year.

Galsworthy Says Films Are Often Unfair With Writers

John Galsworthy, in New York from Arizona, expressed the belief that the writer for pictures must guard himself always with a sound and inclusive contract, "so one can talk of injunctions and things like that."

He calls it unfair that an author's name is put to a work when little of his work is left in the production. "The ideal solution, it seems to me," he said, "would be to get authors to write direct for the screen."

Warners Reach Production Peak

Hollywood (QP)—Warner-First National, with six in production and seven other features slated to start within two weeks, faces the biggest schedule since the companies consolidated. By April 15, thirteen will be in production. In addition to features, the Bobby Jones shorts are in production.

J. D. Williams Coming Back; Handling Viking Picture

Release of the Viking picture will mark the re-entrance of J. D. Williams in films. The feature, retakes for which cost the lives of scores when the vessel was wrecked off Newfoundland shores last month, will be handled on an elaborate scale, possibly roadshowing. "J. D.'s" deal for distributing rights has already been closed.

Dowling to Film Famous Comedy

Eddie Dowling's famous Broadway comedy, "Honeymoon Lane," goes into production soon at the Metropolitan Studios in Hollywood. It is scheduled for release by Paramount in July and is dated for the Paramount Theatre, New York, late in that month.

"Honeymoon Lane" will be produced by Dowling, personally, and is the only independent production on the Paramount 1930-31 release schedule. It is an adaptation of the play that ran eighteen months at the Knickerbocker Theatre in New York City and then played more than a year on the road.

William Vogel, well known in the export field, has become associated with Dowling and George Weeks in the production of "Honeymoon Lane" and leaves with them and Mrs. Dowling (Ray Dooley) for Hollywood this week.

INDUSTRY FACES HANDICAP IF NEW FIRE PREVENTION CODE IS ADOPTED

Penny Ante

Chicago (QP)—The extent to which this town has gone in for double featuring may be gleaned from the following newest wrinkles:

One house, in order to steal a march on competition, is distributing 100,000 pasteboards which may be exchanged for three admissions for the price of one. Heretofore, the theatre heavily had plugged two-for-one admissions.

Teatro del Lago had to go double features when it discovered its North Shore millionaire patronage was driving over into Chicago to take advantage of the bargain bills in various North Side houses.

Double featuring of "Hell's Angels," which was supposed to be the height of something or other in this town, was outclassed with double featuring of "Cimarron."

The 20th Century offered a double Jewish talker program during the Passover.

In addition to its triple feature programs, the New Drake stages "give-away" nights.

Next? Perhaps a move by which the management would permit customers to kiss the cashier or the usher, or else take home three rows of seats and a lobby divan.

Two New Color Device Firms Are Established in New York

Opticolor Corporation, Merrill Waide, president, has been formed to market a new three-color, additive process, to be made at the studio in Long Island City. It involves a lens to be attached to any standard projector. T. W. Phillips of Pennsylvania and Chester Breining are the men behind the venture.

Rotocolor, invented by Harold Muller of New York, has opened offices. The new device involves a shutter attachable to any standard projector, and easily removed, allowing a quick change from black and white to color.

Publix Theatres in Texas Eliminate All Stage Shows

San Antonio—All Publix theatres in Texas will revert to a straight sound film policy beginning April 17, with all stage shows eliminated from the entertainment henceforth.

Prohibitive cost of presentations is assigned as the reason. One year ago the same thing was tried, with a drop in box office receipts which made reinstallation imperative.

Proposed Change Would Cost Huge Sums

Wholesale Revision of Regulations on Handling Film Is Asked As Result of Sound

The industry faces considerable difficulty in wholesale mechanical changes costing tremendous sums, if the annual convention of the National Fire Protection Association, scheduled for Toronto, May 11 to 14, passes recommendations calling for complete revision of standard regulations governing measures for fire prevention in handling motion picture film in exchanges, laboratories, studios and theatres.

The adoption of a new code would automatically change local ordinances throughout the country, municipal authorities and fire insurance interests accepting codes of the N.F.P.A. as an official model for fire prevention.

The association's Committee on Hazardous Chemicals and Explosives already has compiled the changes and will recommend their passage. This would be the first wholesale change since 1919, and is understood to be considered necessary because of sound.

Ask Fire-Resistive Construction

New regulations provide for fire-resistive construction wherever feasible, automatic sprinkler protection over all rooms where film is handled in quantity, standard vaults for storage, and strict control of smoking and other potential sources of ignition of film.

Following a series of fires in exchanges where nitrocellulose film was handled in quantity, the association prepared in 1919 regulations for safeguarding against this hazard. These regulations were applied largely by the industry, which through the Hays organization has been co-operating

"Little Caesar" Goes Free!

Chicago (QP)—Little Caesar has been ordered set free!

At last, after three months, the Warner Brothers picture of that name comes out of the detention camp established by the Chicago censor board, but it took a writ of mandamus, issued by Judge Marcus Kavanagh, ordering the Chicago censor board to release the print. The court action was initiated only after the exchange had tried in vain to effect a compromise with the board on the cuts demanded.

Plans were made immediately to open the picture simultaneously Thursday at the Woods and Warners Orpheum, but—

The censors at latest reports were not burning up any fountain pens in issuing a permit as ordered by the court, and the exchange had visions of a move for a restraining order. The case has paralleled that of "The Doorway to Hell," in which censors, churches and women's clubs raised their voices stentoriously in protest.

Judge Kavanagh's writ permits exhibition of the picture without change—no eliminations and no restriction to adults.

Evans Makes Dramatic Exit From PCT at Annual Meeting

London—Lack of harmony between the Ostrer brothers, bankers and owners of P. C. T., and the circuit's managing director, Will Evans, is understood to have promoted the resignation of Evans, tendered dramatically at the annual stockholders' meeting here.

Evans will temporarily remain with the company, but minus the managing director's title. His resignation was followed by a request that stockholders vote employees an extra week's salary for aiding progress of the company. Stockholders, however, turned thumbs down on the proposition; nor did Isidore Ostrer, chairman, appear favorably inclined to the bonus.

Profit of P.C.T. in 1930 increased $350,000 over 1929. ...

MUSIC AS THE NARRATOR

A musician's exposition for laymen on the new art indicated by "Tabu"

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

IN the last days of the silent feature productions the coalition of music and motion pictures had reached a point where a new and distinctive art was coming into being. With the advent of sound to the screen and the consequent recording of dialogue, music—in the sense that it interpreted feeling, action or pictorial moods—has been relegated to a subordinate position in talking pictures. This was inevitable. No longer is it the sole voice that expresses in various shades, intensity and tempo the pictorial presentation of drama. Only in special short subjects designed for that purpose is music synchronized in the tone-picture sense.

What the future will bring to the talking-singing-sound screen, will be in exact proportion to the ability and vision of those who control its destiny; but it can safely be predicted that a new art just as distinctive as the fusion of the silent screen and the well synchronized score, will be evolved for the talking screen play; not the hybrid art of the old-fashioned conventional opera, nor the abstruse compromise of the music-drama, but a talking-photoplay-music art that will derive from within its own integral being and ultimately find its own niche in the realm of things that endure.

In whatever form it is molded (if it be a definite form), it is indubitably true that the welding of pictures that are inarticulate to music that is eloquent—when done by a master—has an enchantment all its own, quickening the emotions while stimulating the imagination of the observer.

A truly remarkable example of musical interpretation of photographic screen material is to be seen—and heard—at the Central Park theatre in Fifty-ninth street. The picture is "Tabu," described as "a dramatic romance of the South Seas by F. W. Murnau and Robert J. Flaherty—musical setting by Hugo Riesenfeld." The music is made an integral part of the narration, to a degree beyond previous screen treatment.

To the musical cognoscenti the score which Mr. Riesenfeld has given to this production will reveal a rich tapestry of tonal texture and open up new vistas of picture-tone possibilities; while to the philistine who takes his music on the screen as he finds it, there will be a multitude of sensory impressions that cannot but stamp indelibly on his consciousness the luscious beauty and lyric drama of this saga of elemental emotions. Of the witchery of the pictorial matter, there is no question; but it is doubtful if even the loveliness of the scenes and the emotional appeal of the naive story would linger in the mind if it were not for the entrancing musical conception synchronized by Dr. Riesenfeld. Emerging from the theatre into the gas-impregnated atmosphere of Fifty-Ninth Street, above the roar, the rattle and raucous riot of traffic, there came to this reviewer again and again fragments of the lilting melodies of the South Sea Island maidens, the haunting love theme, the fateful motif of the old chieftain, and that insistent marche funebre ending with a dramatic cymbal crash on the word "Tabu" which concludes the score—and the picture.

One cannot disassociate the music from the picture. Not a word is spoken throughout the entire production and the titles are but very few, confined to written script, and yet the drama is told as forcefully, as definitely, and more effectively than if the actors spoke in perfect dramatic cadence.

Mr. Riesenfeld has accomplished something here that impresses through its sensitiveness an appreciation of the psychological as well as emotional contents of the story; psychological in that it translates into musical terms the motivation of these elementary characters—the superstition—the dread of the unknown—the utter simplicity of their natures. This is evidenced as much in the coloring of the orchestration as in the melodic character of the music itself. For the melodic line is at all times evident—melody that never degenerates into the cheap, interspersed with descriptive and dramatic moments that shift in kaleidoscopic synchrony with the picture. If the score itself were played unaccompanied by the picture, there would be revealed a tone poem that would stimulate mental picture of shifting fantasy.

A first audition of this masterly score inevitably suggests much of the manner in which Puccini created "Madame Butterfly." Perhaps it is the exotic

Themes from "Tabu"

LOVE THEME — W. FRANKE HARLING

This melodious theme, announced usually in the strings, typifies the naive love of Matahi, the boy, and Reri, the girl. It is used in scenes of romance and in reminiscent episodes.

"TABU" THEME — HUGO RIESENFELD

BRASS

A strong, emphatic sequence of chords, scored for the brass, was written by Mr. Riesenfeld, as the "Tabu" theme. It is reiterated many times throughout the picture, interpreting the superstitious motif that predominates.

FATE THEME — HUGO RIESENFELD

MUTED BRASS

Similar in character to the "Tabu Theme" is the "Fate Theme," scored for muted brass. The sinister character and tone color of this theme synchronizes with the inexorable destiny that pursues the lovers.

SAMOAN LOVE SONG — CORYNN KIEHL

WOODWIND

This haunting melody is based on a traditional folk song of Samoa. It is first heard when sung by the chorus of natives, and recurs frequently. It adds tonal authenticity to the setting and an exotic atmosphere that is convincing.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

W. E. Stoddard, who as general sales manager of Triangle, Film Corp., is distributing the synchronized version of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation."

Royalty "goes to the movies," as M-G-M's "Trader Horn" is shown at the Palladium theatre in Stockholm. They are Crown Princess Astrid of Belgium, Prince Carl of Sweden, Crown Prince Olav of Norway, Crown Princess Martha of Norway, and Margereta of Denmark.

Florenz Ziegfeld picked her. Claire Dodd of Little Rock, Ark., one of three girls chosen for a part in "Whoopee," which Paramount will shortly produce.

How it's done. Workmen laying track down which the camera and "mike" will travel, keeping pace with a rowboat of romance, while Constance Bennett and Joel McRae rehearse for this sequence of the Radio picture starring Miss Bennett, as yet not definitely titled.

A billion-candlepower searchlight used now in picture making. Indicating the spot where a carbon arc provides the illumination of the lamp, said to be the largest of its kind in existence, is Raquel Torres, featured player at M-G-M, where the big light has been placed in service.

Black lace and ermine—and that's as far as Irene Delroy gives us any opportunity to go in describing her costume in this offering, which has for its purpose two things: The news that her next First National picture will be "Men of the Sky." And Miss Delroy.

Another DeMille in pictures. Cecil B. DeMille, now producing as well as directing for M-G-M, with his daughter, Katherine, shown as assistant script girl on her father's next, "The Squaw Man."

Peering into the future picture. The cameraman took one of those less familiar trips behind the scenes for this one showing Sidney Brod, assistant director for Paramount, visualizing a page out of the script of a coming production—and smiling, therefore, rather auspiciously for Paramount.

Gone native. Conchita Montenegro, native of Spain and also, for this picture, of the South Seas, doing her bit by the native fruit of California between scenes at M-G-M. It's frivolous, we know, but altogether now: We like our oranges but oh, you, etc., etc.

The first and the second. C. Gardner Sullivan, M-G-M writer, with C. Gardner II, who was recently host to 12 other four-year-olds of picture people at his first birthday party.

A screen celebrity at home. Jack Oakie and "the district attorney." And we'll have to explain that one: It's what he calls his mother, with whom we see the Paramount comedian in the charming living room of the Oakie home in a delightful residential section of the film capital.

In New York, after finishing up with "Too Many Crooks." Ah, well, far be it from us to moralize. And, of course, Broadway was glad to see pretty Miss Dorothy Lee (yup, it rhymes) when she arrived the other day from Hollywood after completing her latest Radio production.

Seems the cameraman got the wrong picture! However, besides something very nice indeed by way of background, we here have Samuel Zierler, producer and president of James Cruze Productions, and Cruze himself. Their adaptation of "Salvation Nell" has been titled "Divine Love."

AMUSEMENT STOCKS JOIN IN RALLY

Fox Recovers After 8 Point Drop—Paramount Advance Is Made On Steady Demand

By THE ANALYST

Heavy selling of Fox Film A featured amusement shares on the New York Exchange during the past week. After a rise of more than a point early in the week, Fox was subject to unloading in anticipation of the refinancing announcement made late in the week and the stock broke to a new low for the year at 24¼, off more than eight points from last Thursday's closing level.

Fox recovered about two points of the loss later in a general market improvement. Most of the selling was ascribed to a large holder who was anxious about the company's delay in arranging new financing, but, with that factor out of the way, financial circles were of the opinion that the long-term outlook was better, although it was pointed out that a period of readjustment must be looked for as a result of the changes in directorate.

Rallying tendencies cropped out in the other amusement stocks late in the week, Eastman Kodak, Loew's and General Theatres Equipment scoring substantial recoveries from their earlier lows, although holding below last Thursday's closing levels.

Paramount was a bright spot in the list, responding to the impressive 1930 earnings report and favorable showing made by the company's latest balance sheet by advancing more than a point on a steady demand. RKO displayed steadiness and held in a comparatively narrow range. Warners dipped fractionally into new low ground for

Eastman 1930 Earnings Top $20,353,789

With the exception of the record-breaking year of 1929, all previous annual earnings were surpassed by Eastman Kodak in 1930.

Net income amounted to $20,353,789, equal to $8.84 a share on the common, compared with $22,004,916, or $9.57 a share in the previous year. Total surplus at the end of 1930 aggregated $84,675,404, against $82,780,537 at the close of 1929.

A generally strong condition was revealed in the balance sheet, which showed total assets of $167,135,319 at December 27, 1930, compared with $163,467,508 at the end of 1929. Current assets of $86,559,184 compared with current liabilities of $13,415,573, while at the close of 1929 current assets were $93,764,138, against current liabilities of $15,134,401.

Preferred dividends paid by the company during 1930 amounted to $369,942, the same as in 1929, while common stock dividends amounted to $17,861,380, compared with $16,858,112 in the previous year. The company has no bonded debt.

Clarke Sets New Finance Program Of Fox Company

National Bank, St. Louis.

J. A. MOFFETT, vice president and director, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

Those of the present board who are expected to be re-elected are:

HARLEY L. CLARKE, president of Fox Film Corporation and of Utilities Power & Light Corporation.

MATTHEW C. BRUSH, president American International Corporation.

C. W. HIGLEY, president, Hanover Fire Insurance Company.

WINFIELD SHEEHAN, vice president and general manager of Fox Film Corporation.

WILLIAM FOX, former president of Fox Film Corporation.

When these new directors are elected next week, the proposed refinancing of Fox will have been entirely completed.

A syndicate headed by Chase Securities Corp. and including Dillon Read & Co., Bancamerica-Blair Corp., Harris, Forbes & Co., Chatham-Phenix Corp., Central-Illinois Co., and Hayden, Stone & Co. will underwrite $30,000,000, five-year, 6% convertible debentures, to be offered to stockholders and the public.

Outstanding capitalization of Fox Film upon completion of the present financing program will consist of

5 year debentures....	$30,000,000
Class A Common....	2,425,660 shares
Class B Common....	100,000 shares

Fox subsidiaries have outstanding approximately $28,000,000 in bonds, notes, mortgages and purchase money obligations, in addition to preferred stocks of $250,000 par value.

In conjunction with the $30,000,000 debenture issue, the refinancing plan provides for the sale of Fox's 660,900 shares in Loew's, Inc. to Film Securities Corporation, a new holding company organized by the Fox bankers which will pay $28,800,000 and 462,000 shares of Securities Class A stock for 660,900 shares of Loew common held by Fox.

This procedure is being studied by the Department of Justice with a view of determining its possible effect upon the government's action to force Fox to divest itself of the Loew holdings. This suit is scheduled for trial in about two months in the United States district court in New York. While it is said that the sale of the stock might have some effect upon the government's suit, the trial will be held as scheduled unless a consent decree is entered prior to it.

Fox has grossed $441,000,000 in the 15 years of its operation, of which $54,771,000 represents net profit, before Federal income tax.

Estimated net for 1930 is $13,000,000, after Federal taxes, with the gross for the last year reaching approximately $102,000,000.

Growth of Fox's assets and earnings since its organization 15 years ago is shown in the tabulation which follows:

	Total Assets	Gross Income	Net Profit*
1915.....	$2,420,000	$2,181,000	$523,000

TOTALS:		$440,998,000	$54,771,000

*Before Federal income tax.
a—As of June 30, 1930.
b—Per statement by Fox Film.
c—Estimated, after Federal income tax.

Creation by Film Securities of three additional types of stock issues in addition to the Class A turned over to Fox for the Loew holdings, will develop the financial structure of Film Securities along the following lines:

Class A	462,000 shares
2 year 6% Notes.....	$20,000,000
(Secured by 660,900 shares of Loew stock)
$7 Cumulative Pfd....	100,000 shares
(With preference on liquidation of $100 per share)
Common	51,000 shares

Transfer of Film Securities Class A to Fox gives Fox a 90% equity in the profits of the Loew stock. No public offering of any of Film Securities issues will be made, at least for a while.

The syndicate of bankers has also underwritten a non-public issue of $15,000,000 2- year 6% gold notes for West Coast Theatres. These notes bear the name of Wesco, holding company of West Coast, and bring the total cash acquisition by Fox in the current refinancing program to $73,800,000 of which only $30,000,000 is available to the public. The total obtained is divided as follows:

5 year 6% Fox Debentures	$30,000,000
From transfer of Loew holdings to Film Securities	28,800,000
(Plus 462,000 "A" Securities shares)
2 year 6% Notes for Wesco	15,000,000
TOTAL	$73,800,000

The new 5-year debentures, redeemable at 110, are convertible at any time after October 1, 1931, into Fox Class A common, on the basis of 30 shares of Fox "A" for each $1,000 debenture.

The new debentures are to be issued under an indenture to the Chase National Bank of New York as trustee. Among other provisions of this indenture, it is provided that the debentures will be redeemable at option of the corporation as a whole or in part at 110 per cent of the principal amount plus accrued interest. Another provision of the indenture is that the corporation will apply the net cash proceeds realized from the sale of all or any part of the stock interests in Wesco Corp. or in United American Investing Corp., including Metropolis & Bradford Trust Co., Ltd., or in Film Securities Corp., to the retirement of these debentures by purchase or redemption.

Just prior to announcement of the refinancing plans, Fox Film issued a statement saying the financing program would reduce the consolidated funded debt of the corporation by more than $25,000,000 and leave it with more than $9,000,000 cash and more than $16,000,000 working capital.

"The annual report will show that gross income increased about 33% during the year," the statement said.

"The gain of approximately $19,000,000 in gross income was accounted for in part by acquisition of theatres and increase in theatre income, and in part by an increase of nearly 11 per cent in domestic film rental and approximately 55 per cent. in foreign film rentals. The total of film rentals and sales for 1930 increased $4,000,000 over 1929."

The Class A shares of Film Securities will participate in dividends on a share for share basis with approximately 51,000 shares of common to be acquired by the banking syndicate, but will be entitled to a preference over such common stock on liquidation up to $100 per share, and to participate as a class on a parity with the common stock in any distribution of assets in excess of such preferential amount. The Class A stock will have no voting rights in respect of election of directors, this right being reserved exclusively to the common stock, but it will be entitled to vote on other matters share for share with the common stock. The net earnings of Loew's, Inc., applicable to its common stock for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1930, including undistributed share of earnings of affiliated companies, as shown in the annual report of that company, were equivalent to $9.65 per share on the shares outstanding at the end of that period. Based on the current annual dividend payments on such stock ($3 regular and $1 extra) the 660,900 shares of stock to be owned by Film Securities would receive annual dividends of $2,643,600. This amount is substantially in excess of interest charges on the two-year notes and priority dividends on the preferred stock of Film Securities.

Based on New York Stock Exchange closing quotations on April 7, 1931, the 2,425,660 shares of Class A common of Fox Film now outstanding had a market value of approximately $70,000,000.

Wesco Corporation was formed in 1926 and is a wholly owned subsidiary of Fox Film. The 521 theatres owned, controlled or leased through subsidiary or associated companies, operate in California, Washington, Kansas, Colorado, Wisconsin, Illinois, Oregon and Montana. Net earnings of Wesco and its subsidiaries for the 52 weeks ended September 27, 1930, were alone more than the total annual interest requirements of Fox Film and subsidiaries.

Consolidated net earnings before interest and Federal income taxes of Fox Film and wholly owned subsidiary, controlled and/or affiliated companies for the 52 weeks ended September 27, 1930, adjusted to give effect to the elimination of all income from dividends on the common stock of Loew's, due to the sale of this common stock as part of the present financing program, were $10,203,440.

Sunday Bill Gets Right of Way In England But Faces Hard Row

Shakeup at British International Studios—Garratt May Succeed Captain Auten

By W. H. MOORING

London (QP)—The bill to amend the existing situation in regard to Sunday cinemas and theatres will be introduced without fail in a few days, the home secretary, the Rt. Hon. J. H. Clynes, announced in the House of Commons March 26. It will be left to a free vote of the House, which means that if any really progressive step were proposed it most certainly would be defeated, since the Sabbatarians have been busy over a long period and have not only organized themselves in the provinces—among local licensing bodies—but have attained the pledges of a very large percentage of the local legislature.

Furthermore, by the irony of things, their representatives are supported by the M. P.s pledged to uphold in Parliament the interests of the brewers who own Britain's Sunday opening liquor bars.

The cinema industry has not attempted to organize public opinion on the question of Sunday entertainment, although there is no doubt a terrific bulk of public demand for this. Instead, the leaders of the industry have tried hard to influence the introduction of a measure compromising the situation, and legalizing Sunday cinemas and theatres on certain conditions. Among these is likely a statutory decree that theatres shall pay a good proportion of their profits made on Sundays—if not all—to charities.

Another condition in the new bill will forbid the employment of cinema workers for a total of seven days of the week.

British International Changes

Indications are that big changes are likely within the next three weeks on the British International studio personnel at Elstree.

For a considerable time whispers have been going that John Court Applebee Thorpe, the general manager, and John Maxwell, the B. I. P. chief, were shortly to part company. Inside matters have been much awry over the past six months—several in big jobs fighting several others in other big jobs.

Walter Mycroft, former film critic and for the past three years scenario chief for B. I. P., is said to be marked for a bigger job. There is some surprise at this, though. Mycroft is known to be popular with John Maxwell.

Other minor changes may come also, and although many agree that changes for the better could be made, there is some doubt whether they will be sweeping enough to get rid of all deadwood.

Garratt May Succeed Capt. Auten

Sidney Garratt, of Inter Globe and Export Company, D'Arblay street, London, is under consideration by British International as a possible successor to Capt. Harold Auten, V. C., the company's present American representative.

Garratt is said to have expressed his keen anticipation of an early trip to U. S. A. to take over for B. I. P. there. Immediately the beans were thus spilled, B. I. P. executives declared that "it is one of those matters which is by no means settled yet." And then Garratt also said things were not fixed firmly yet. However, it is interesting to know that at least there have been thoughts of making changes in this direction.

Garratt has visited U. S. A. fairly often for his own company, which is not of course a big one. He will need to be a strong man to follow the V. C., whose popularity among the trade in America is something worth while.

Report Colorcraft Interested

Capt. A. C. N. Dixey, M. P., a well known and respected solicitor, is exchanging overtures with Colorcraft and Hollywood International. The idea is to get American support, and presumably cash, to back a plan for erection of new film studios at Richings Park in Buckinghamshire, about an hour's trip from London.

A private syndicate was formed nearly a year back to run up studios at Esher Surrey, but local individuals felt superior and turned down the idea.

At the time a certain Capt. Myles was doing the preliminary business, but some few weeks ago he was given a term in jail for larceny. Now it is understood he will be deported. The company, having shaken free of unpleasant conditions, may get ahead. Anyway, Capt. Dixey is working for American associations.

Expensive Story for Warner

"Murder on the Second Floor," fairly successful on the London stage, is to be filmed by Twickenham Film Studios, Ltd., as a Warner Bros. British quota picture. As Warner paid approximately $30,000 for the rights, this is probably the costliest story ever put into British quota. Last week a well known writer offered a good work to B. I. P. and asked $15,000. He was told that they never pay more than $500 or so for an original story.

Eckman for "Individualism"

Sam Eckman, Jr., British chief for M-G-M, who is the newly appointed president of the British Kinematograph Renters Society, made a characteristic speech at the society's ninth annual dinner this week. He is regarded as one of the strong men among distributors over here.

Top table speeches, he said, would never solve trade problems. The industry always would have problems—they are the mileposts on the road to progress, he added, but warned that those sowing seeds of discontent were not serving the industry well. We need a revival of faith and optimism, he declared. While the K. R. S. believes in working in harmony with other trade associations in solving trade difficulties, it is a fallacy, he pointed out, to think that all problems could be so settled. "You can not take away from individuals the right to do business among themselves, and to remedy evils by the same methods by which they are created," Eckman stated.

The guest of honor at this dinner was Brigadier General C. G. Dawes American ambassador here. But he said nothing.

New Board Head

Former municipal Court Justice John R. Davies, of the New York law firm of Davies & Lesser, who has been elected chairman of the National Board of Review, of which Wilton A. Barrett is executive secretary, succeeds Dr. Walter W. Pettit, who will continue as an active member of the executive committee.

John R. Davies

For 20 years Judge Davies presided in the municipal courts, and is at present one of the six official referees of the municipal courts of New York. Prior to his election to the bench he served four years in the board of aldermen, two years as chairman of the finance committee. In 1923, Gov. Alfred E. Smith appointed him as one of two judges upon the commission including the bar association to recommend legislation for improvement of administration of the municipal court. Judge Davies is a member of the American, state, city and county bar associations and the Society of Medical Jurisprudence.

Dr. Pettit, whom Judge Davies succeeds as chairman of the National Board, is director of the community organization department of the N. Y. School of Social work. In 1915-16 he was special assistant to the American Embassy in Petrograd, and in 1918 was commissioned by President Wilson to secure first-hand information regarding the situation in Soviet Russia.

18 MILLION NET VERIFIES WALL STREET OPINION OF PARAMOUNT STRENGTH

Assets Are $306,269,158; New Record High

Ratio of Current Assets to Liabilities at End of 1930 Was 2.46 to 1

Wall Street opinion that Paramount-Publix Corporation is one of the soundest units financially in American industry, and one of the top notch business structures in the motion picture field, was corroborated this week by issuance of the corporation's financial statement for the past year, which revealed net profits of $18,381,000, and a net of $4,834,989 for three months ended December 27, after charges and reserves for all taxes.

The record earnings for 1930 are 18 per cent ahead of 1929, previous record year, when the net reached $15,544,000, and are more than double the 1928 net of $8,713,000.

Earnings of 1930 equalled $6.15 per share. Fourth quarter profit equalled $1.55 per share.

Per Share Earnings Since 1928

Earnings for the fourth 1930 quarter compare with $5,812,000 net for the same period in 1929. Fourth quarter 1928 net totaled $2,737,000.

Comparison of profits per share yearly since 1928 follows:

Year	Profits	Av. No. Shares Outstanding	Earnings Per Share
1930	$18,381,178	$2,986,829	$6.15
1929	15,544,544	2,445,304	6.36
1928	8,713,063	2,062,857	4.22

The company during the year paid out in dividends approximately 66 per cent of its net income and its earned surplus account increased from $26,764,000 at the end of 1929 to $33,004,000 at the end of 1930.

All items in the asset column of the balance sheet showed increases over 1929 and 1928, current assets rising to $39,579,378 from $37,053,395 at the end of 1929, and $35,312,723 at the close of 1928. Net working capital gained from $22,092,712 at the end of 1929 to $23,497,831 on December 27, 1930.

In spite of increased taxes and appearance of additional items in the liabilities column, total current liabilities rose only $1,120,864 during 1930 and the ratio of current assets to current liabilities at the end of the year 1930 was 2.46 to 1, against 2.47 to 1 at December 28, 1929.

Maintains Strong Position

Paramount has maintained the strong working capital position which it has built up over the last few years by the policy of making most of its acquisitions through share exchanges, thus conserving cash and other assets to the fullest extent. During 1930, property and plant account was heavily added to, fixed assets at the end of the year totaling $233,419,188, compared with $174,838,176 at the end of 1929 and $106,872,337 at the close of 1928.

Total assets of $306,269,158 at the end of 1930 compared with $236,710 at the end of 1929 and $170,631,704 at December 29, 1928. Decreases in accounts payable, money due to subsidiaries, purchase money obligations, serial payments and appropriated surplus were shown in the liability column.

Although net profit for 1930 established a new high record, per share earnings were slightly smaller, amounting to $6.15 a share in 1930, against $6.36 a share in 1929, due to a larger number of shares outstanding. Consolidated earned surplus at the end of the year amounted to $33,004,167, against $26,764,025 last year.

Funded Debt Increased

Funded debt of the corporation increased during 1930 as a result of the issuance in August of $15,000,000 20-year 5½ per cent sinking fund gold bonds for the purpose of providing funds for theatre acquisitions. In 1930 Paramount's subsidiaries acquired additional theatre interests in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Connecticut.

In addition, consolidated subsidiaries started operation of 19 theatres newly constructed in 1930 with a total seating capacity of 33,000, while partially owned companies opened seven newly built houses seating 12,000. By the end of the year Paramount and affiliates operated theatres in 422 cities and towns in 44 states.

Foreign distribution made the best showing in the company's history, the report said, gaining nearly 20 per cent over 1929, the previous record year. This resulted in construction of a studio in Paris and, in conjunction with the New York and Hollywood studios, productions were made in French, German, Spanish, Italian, Swedish, Hungarian, Czechoslovakian and other languages, totaling 96 features and 96 shorts.

Consolidated Income

The profit and loss account and balance sheet, respectively, for the first time disclosed profits of $31,000,000 before Federal taxes and depreciation of fixed assets and a segregation of fixed assets into two items—the first, "Land," carried at $69,000,000, and the second, "Building, Leases and Equipment," carried at $138,000,000 after depreciation. Depreciation against fixed assets amounted to $12,400,000 for the year, $1,700,000 of which was capitalized and written off as film exhaustion.

Comparative consolidated income account for the past three years follows:

	Dec. 27, '30	Dec 28, '29	Dec. 29, '28

New Publix Ohio House

Mansfield, O.—The new 1,600-seat house being erected by Publix and Skirboll will be called the Madison upon completion next August.

Publix May Take Chamberlain Circuit, In Financial Tangle

Philadelphia—The Chamberlain circuit, involved in litigation and financial difficulties, may pass to Paramount Publix on May 1, when bond and mortgage interest falls due, it is understood.

Mortgages total $672,000 and interest on bonds is said to be $101,000. The $100,000 necessary to refinance the company, which stockholders are seeking to raise, is meant to put the company on a paying basis, and take it out of receivership.

Four New Publix Theatres Add 6,000 Seats to Circuit

The early completion of four Publix houses, two in Illinois, one in Ohio and one in Kentucky, will add 6,000 seats to the circuit. Each house will be called Paramount.

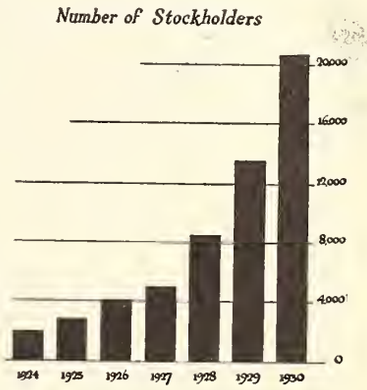
Three of the houses will operate on straight sound policy, and one Illinois house will run vaudeville and pictures.

Court Enjoins Outside Use Of "Publix" In Federal Suit

The federal district court in Massachusetts has rendered a decision enjoining all persons from using the name Publix, or any simulation thereof.

Paramount-Publix legal department will prosecute such concerns as are at present using the name Publix or Paramount in connection with their business.

And They're Right!



Los Angeles—The General Ministerial Association denounced "wholesale censorship of motion pictures" as "unwise" and states: "Censorship should come in the hearts and minds of the people. The screen can be made a most powerful instrument for betterment of Government and morals."

Close to 21,000 Holding Stock in Paramount Now

Never before in the history of the industry has the public evidenced such keen interest and confidence in motion picture stocks, as evidenced by the vast numbers which have in recent months become owners of film issues.

Paramount's list of holders has increased from approximately 12,500 in 1929 to 20,778 at the end of 1930, an increase of 13,000, the largest for any year of the company's operation.

Stockholders now on Paramount's books are located in every state of the Union and 23 foreign countries and U. S. possessions, further indicating that the public's interest in amusements and its stock issues is widespread.

Approximately 2,000 stockholders were listed on the books of Paramount at the end of 1924, indicating a 19,000 increase in six years. Between 1924 and 1927, the increase was slow, the number only jumping in that period from 2,000 to 4,200. Following years, however, saw a sensational rise, with the list increasing from 8,050 at the end of 1928 to 14,000 at the close of 1929.

Portugal Decorates Zukor For First Native Picture

Civil honors have been bestowed upon Adolph Zukor and three other Paramount men by the Portuguese government, in appreciation of the production of the first film in Portuguese made at the Joinville studio in Paris.

Besides Zukor, Robert T. Kane, general manager of the studio; M. J. Messeri, Paramount manager in Spain and Portugal, and Andre Daven, studio production supervisor, were decorated.

City Streets

(Paramount)

Knockout Gangster Fare

A story with numerous interesting twists plus unusually good direction and fine acting makes "City Streets" an outstanding underworld talker. To Rouben Mamoulian who directed the picture goes a great deal of credit. He knows how to use a camera to emphasize the dramatic moments and that, coupled with good acting, makes them unsually effective. Short closeups are used to build up the dramatic interest and, aided by expert cutting, heighten the interest in the picture to a large degree.

Gary Cooper in the main role handles a part different from his usual type, in a highly competent manner. Sylvia Sidney in her film debut makes a pleasing heroine and her dramatic moments are most praiseworthy.

William Boyd, Paul Lukas, Guy Kibbee and Wynne Gibson offer characterizations that are commendable. The camera work by Lee Garmes is especially good and the effects he obtains are most interesting.

The picture does not in any way glorify the gangster, which is somewhat unusual.

The story deals with Miss Sidney's love for Cooper, a shooting gallery operator whose ability to handle a gun, makes him outstanding. Sidney tells Cooper that big money is to be made in the beer racket and she tries to get him into it. Her father, Guy Kibbee, being one of the racketeers, Sidney gets into trouble with the police while helping Kibbee and is sent to jail for being an accomplice to a murder Kibbee has committed. Kibbee lets the girl take the blame instead of himself. He then gets Cooper to join up with Paul Lukas, the gang chief, to earn enough money to free Miss Sidney. In the beer game Cooper makes rapid strides and becomes fairly important. When Sidney is freed from the penitentiary she tries to get Cooper to give up the beer game, realizing it is a losing battle.

Lukas, upon meeting Miss Sidney, makes a play for her and, when Cooper interferes, has him "put on the spot." Cooper turns the tables on the gang and escapes. In the meantime Wynne Gibson, Lukas' friend, kills Lukas for forcing her from his home, and Miss Sidney is blamed for the murder. As a result the gang plans to take her for a ride, with Cooper driving the "death" car. Going up mountain roads at a terrific speed he is able to intimidate the gunmen and forces them to leave the car, saving himself and Miss Sidney.

Plenty of action and thrills keep the audience interest throughout and make this fascinating screen fare.

Not Exactly Gentlemen

(Fox)

Action, Thrills

This is being played at the New York Roxy under the title of "Three Rogues." It has wide appeal, and should find general favor, for it has action, thrills, romance and comedy. It is a story of the South Dakota land rush, showing the mad dash for the gold lands in the days of the wild West.

To this setting comes Fay Wray, southern girl, carrying a map which shows the location of her late father's mine. She is accompanied by McLaglen, Lew Cody and Eddie Gribbon, three rogues whom she believes her friends and protectors. The night before the land rush all three try to devise ways and means to get the map and each unsuccessfully proposes marriage. Their scheming is overheard by the villain who kidnaps the girl and steals the map.

She is rescued by the three partners in one of the most thrilling fights ever screened, a rough and tumble affair which is short but snappy. Then the land rush and the outwitting of the villain. Just as the girl gives the three a share in the mine, a United States marshal appears with a posse and the three make their escape, leaving the girl with her sweetheart.

The acting is uniformly good with McLaglen and Lew Cody standing out over Gribbon, chiefly because they have more to do. Direction is fine and the land rush thrilling.

Use comedy shorts and musicals on the bill with this.

Broadminded

(Warner)

Fairly Funny

Joe E. Brown's mouth and Joe E. Brown's noises have the lead in this picture, which is strangely remindful of other pictures in which Mr. Brown has appeared and other pictures, in which other comics have appeared from time to time down through the years of motion picture progress. Bert Kalmer and Harry Ruby get credit for "Broadminded," which has a few laughable jokes and gags in it. The preview audience laughed now and then but not very consistently.

The story involves the departure of Mr. Brown and Buster Collier from New York in an Austin after one singularly wild party which gets into headlines and attracts the attention of Buster's father. They go to California with the idea of staying away from women. Unfortunately, as far as the idea is concerned, they meet Ona Munson and Marjorie White stranded by the roadside just out of Pasadena.

Romance continues, in spite of the interruptions of Bela Lugosi, delightful semi-heavy, cast as a South American who is easily insulted and who is on the warpath to kill Brown. Thelma Todd, his girl friend, also gets herself mixed into the tangled skeins of the plot when Margaret Livingston, Collier's ex-flame, starts blackmailing him. Grace Hampton is an aunt who doesn't approve, and she does admirably.

The picture is entertaining insofar as Mr. Brown is entertaining. If you like the antics of the comedian there's entertainment in store for you. Also Buster Collier does very well.

The settings are excellent and the sound reproduction is good. Mervyn LeRoy has done a fair job of direction considering the story's tendency toward the routine. Nice process and action shots.

Dramatic shorts and musicals to put some weight in the bill.

Pueblo Terror

Not So Good

A Western that is heavy with old ideas. Most of the action takes place outdoors and the photography and recording are not up to standards. Wanda Hawley, Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Yakima Canutt are listed as the principals, but the only one who does any intelligent acting is Buffalo Bill, Jr. The former film star, who in her heyday did some excellent acting, is totally miscast as the heroine. The direction by Alvin J. Neitz is weak, probably because of the material he had to work with.

The story concerns Bill, returned from the war after three years abroad and finding Paradise Valley a valley of gloom. He learns from the servant who has watched the old home in his absence that one of the ranchers is buying up all the land. But when Bill asks for a showdown, it is found that the rancher blamed for the situation is not responsible.

One of the cowboys is killed and Bill is blamed. The rancher's niece doubles the $5,000 reward offered for his capture, but when it comes to the final sequence the culprit is revealed and everything ends as anticipated.

Strengthen the bill with good shorts of diversified type.

Entertaining

J. P. MacGowan has directed a nice piece of entertainment notwithstanding the old plot. As a result of a series of beautiful outdoor shots with the mountains and lakes blending for beautiful landscapes of the Canadian mountains, one somehow overlooks certain shortcomings as long as the picture appeals generally. And this one should. It has good direction, acting that is satisfactory and photography that can take a place among the best of exterior pictures.

As for the story, it deals with the fur trappers of the Canadian woods, and how a gang awaits its prey as they return from their rounds, to kill them and steal their prizes of beaver fur, and the like. The pilferers get away with it until a Northwest mounted officer is killed and then the law sets out to track down its enemy. With the hero assigned to the case, it is not long before the villains are uncovered and the heroine, a cashier at the barroom run by the gang leader, falls in love with Bob Custer. Blanche Mehaffey does well in her role as the heroine.

The Lightning Flyer

Fair Railroader

Nothing new in the way of material in this fair railroad yarn. Efforts of James Hall, Dorothy Sebastian and a fairly good supporting cast are wasted in a story that has been done so many times that recently a short was made kidding the identical plot.

After being told by his father, president of the railroad, that he go on his own and make good, James Hall is fired from the company's employ. Under an assumed name he rejoins as an engineer, accidentally kills his sweetheart's brother and sends the man responsible for the accident to prison. After the villain breaks jail, he learns that Hall has been transferred and hunts him up for a grand fistfight. In the interim a freight train has broken loose and runs wild, headed toward the special carrying the president of the road and the girl. Totally exhausted from the fight, how Hall has the energy to pick up the weighty track to derail the freight is a feat hard to imagine. Of course all that is lost is a couple of freight trains.

SHORTS

Our Wife

(Educational-Roach)

Great

Another winner from the team of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, and it is one long laugh from start to finish. Plot concerns the efforts of Hardy to stage an elopement with the large Babe London. Marriage is opposed by girl's father but Laurel offers to fix everything. He does. He buys them an Austin in which to make a getaway. One of the picture's high spots is the sequence where the three try to crowd into the tiny car. Seeking a justice of the peace, they find our old cross-eyed friend, Ben Turpin, who reads the marriage ceremony. It is all very confusing, as no one can tell to whom Turpin is speaking. The final gag finds him congratulating Laurel and asking permission to kiss the bride. Whereupon he kisses Hardy. Book this short on any program. It's sure-fire. Running time, 22 minutes.

Strange As It Seems No. 8

(Universal)

Has Interest

A young man of Nevada eating razor blades, electric bulbs, carpet tacks and the like, is the highlight in this colorful and interesting group of oddities filmed here and there. An Oklahoman Indian, an oil millionaire, who sticks to the primitive life, despite modern conveniences, and the Navajo custom which prohibits a mother-in-law from looking upon the face of her daughter's husband, provide interest. The running accompaniment of remarks are not up to par. Running time, 9 minutes.

Open House

(RKO Pathe)

Weak

Another of those Tate College comedies, this time dealing with a basketball game, but the comedy is rather conspicuously lacking. Nat Carr contributes what laugh spots are present, as the tutor who accidentally tacks a quarantine sign on the house in which the students are holding a party. Nick Stuart, Marion Shockley, Kane Richmond and Claire DuBrey do little enough as the support.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Roy Evans

(M-G-M)

Satisfactory

Roy Evans, vaudeville player, does a blackface novelty act, playing two numbers on the piano while singing, with a saxaphone accompaniest helping things along in the third and final number. The introduction is by way of a window with the two men helping themselves uninvited. Then comes the music. Good entertainment.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Big Butter and Yegg Man

(Universal)

Fairly Good

George Sidney plays the banker, who is threatened with death by a bandit who holds him up, if he should tell the police. The thief is caught, Sidney identifies him in the belief that he is unconscious, and then the bandit returns to carry out his threat. A few good laughs, and fairly wide appeal. Running time, 20 minutes.

Speed

(Sennett)

Educational Humor

"Speed," done beautifully in Sennettcolor and released as a comedy special, combines education and humor to a marked degree. While the story behind the picture is a race between Alberta Vaughn and Marjorie Beebe to marry Frankie Eastman, football star, and is filled with humorous incidents, the backgrounds are virtually an air-travelogue. Transcontinental airplanes are used by Miss Vaughan in the race to Eastman and a descriptive narrative covering points of interest and beauty seen from the airplane windows is a part of the picture. Marjorie and her father, Andy Clyde, start off in an old flivver, but also end in the plane. The ending offers a clever twist. Mack Sennett directed, with Babe Stafford assisting. Clyde and Beebe furnish most of the comedy. The title was originally "Air-Minded Brides." Running time, 22 minutes.

One Day to Live

(Universal)

Weak

The story of a young hypochondriac who is told he has but one day to live, is a forced and rather weak attempt at comedy. At the doctor's office there are references to operations and the like, and burlesque. The doctor gives him alcohol by mistake and he begins to step about. Then it is discovered the heart beats were really the ticking of his watch. Not much. Running time, 19 minutes.

Cross Roads

Great

Multicolor in various attractive tints does its part to make this an unusual and interesting travel short, being one of the Romantic Journeys numbers, produced by Brown-Nagel. Claude Fleming relates the story of Samoa to his children, while the film pictures the natives in their natural surroundings. Several beautiful panoramic shots are high spots in the short. Harry Perry did the photography. Running time, 11 minutes.

Windy Riley Goes Hollywood

Not Very Much

The auto record of Windy Riley from New York to Hollywood and the subsequent excitement at a studio when he works a fake publicity stunt, cannot be rated more than fair. The story by Ken Kling is not at all unusual. Jack Shutta, Louise Brooks, William Davidson, Dell Henderson, Wilbur Mack and Walter Merrill do their best but not very successfully. Running time, 21 minutes.

Hunting Thrills

(RKO Pathe)

Real Thrills

A look at this short will disabuse anyone's mind of the idea that crocodile hunting is easy. The hunter goes after them unarmed and even captures one under water. There are thrills and then more thrills in the number. The Everglades of Florida is the locale, and the film's appeal should be national.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Triangle Murder

(Educational-Burns)

Fair

Some of the punch noticeable in the earlier number of these Burns detective shorts is lacking in this particular number, dealing with the solution of a murder committed under the eyes of the police. As entertainment it is satisfactory but the detective story fan probably will find it a bit lacking. Running time, 11 minutes.

Getting on the Green

(RKO Pathe)

Good

The last of the Johnny Farrell golf series of six. The golfer explains and demonstrates a number of very intricate shots, and the manner in which the club should be handled. Farrell and another instructor go around the course.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Back Page

Fine

A play on "Front Page" in which a pressman, in love with the editor's daughter, hies himself out to capture a gangster, in order to marry the girl on the reward. Numerous amusing spots, a highlight being a mixup with an Englishman. Funny and good for a light spot on the bill.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Ringleader

Satisfactory

Another of the William Burns detective mysteries, which rates higher than the regular run of the series. Plenty of suspense until the revelation that one Morton, whose son is in his employ, has been robbing him steadily. For almost any audience.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Cinderella Blues

(RKO Pathe)

Below Standard

This Aesop Fable indicates lack of originality in the artist. The cat visits Fairyland as Cinderella in a limousine, and flys about in a plane, but there is little or no comedy in the short.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Fireman's Bride

Good

A Paul Terry-Toon with plenty of cleverness in idea and possessing wide appeal. The fireman rescues his bride at a fire, and the bride sings a song to her hero fireman at the end. Entertaining.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Freuler Sees Ad Films As Menace To the Industry

"The industry, having overcome external obstacles by great effort, is now menaced from within!" according to John R. Freuler, head of Big 4, who believes that "after long probation, and, having successfully weathered the annexation of acoustics, a new hazard now appears on the screen in the form of merchandising propaganda."

Freuler says that he is "convinced that the keynote of successful operation has been, is, and always will be, the importance of supplying the buyer with exactly what he is paying for—entertainment, with no strings attached!"

"It is true," he states, "that the financial end involved in the industrial subject is attractive, not only to Class 'A' theatres, but to subsequent run houses; however, these latter, which draw consistent audiences, can, even less, afford to run advertising film.

"The public, while cheerfully accepting a carefully selected, limited amount of advertising, per se, will resent the subtle short. They resent it because they are taken unaware, have no redress, and, in order to receive what their money has bought, they are required to bear with 'subsidized' entertainment. They feel, and rightly, the theatre has received just revenue at the box-office, without seeking additional source of revenue at their expense.

"Propaganda of this kind should, at the outside, last no longer than two-and-a-half minutes for a complete program. That time should include the theatre's own announcements in slides or trailers.

"It is, therefore, my belief that the clever exhibitor, surrounded by the rising tide of antipathy to advertising film, will take advantage of the situation by announcing in front of his house that 'No advertising film is shown at this theatre.' It is also my belief that producers will profit by aligning themselves on the side of concerted public sentiment."

Sound Sans Equipment!

The Arlequin, in Quebec City, alternated between silents and French stock, and it was no market for talking films, but M. Burnet, Sono Art salesman, turned the trick anyway, and sold him 14 English dialogue pictures. He arranged to forward to the manager complete dialogue sheets on each picture, which the members of the stock company could memorize after translation. When the film is run, the actors stand behind the screen and render the synchronized dialogue in their own peculiar French way. The customers get the benefit of talking films, and the manager saves the price of sound installation.

RCA Breaks All Sales Records On Photophone

In addition to having broken all previous company records for sale of sound apparatus for theatres during the past 60 days, RCA Photophone is increasing activities in the non-theatrical field. Four complete units of sound reproducing apparatus were ordered for the reformatory at Monroe, Washington penitentiary at Walla Walla, Eastern hospital at Medical Lake and the state training school at Chehalis.

The group is independent, with Paramount alliances. The closing of the deal is expected momentarily, and coincides with the failure so far of United Artists to dispose of the film in this territory.

Fox's Exchange Building Plans In Full Swing

New buildings or complete remodeling of present exchange structures at all key spots is the plan of James R. Grainger, Fox sales chief, who has placed the exchange rehabilitation program in the hands of Herman. Livingston, of the real estate department.

The program has been undertaken to establish up-to-date quarters for company branches and with a view to requirements years hence. In less than a year, aggregate floor space in the 37 domestic branches has been more than doubled.

New equipment is being installed and all projection rooms placed on a standardized basis, making it possible for every office to include a modern screening room.

Amusement Stocks Rally with Others

the year. Pathe common and A were steady in a light turnover.

Trading in film stocks on the curb exchange was very light, attention centering mainly on Trans-Lux, which sold off to a net loss of more than a point on realizing attracted by an early advance. General Theatres Equipment preferred came back strongly after a dip in sympathy with Fox Film A. The former stock is dependent upon Fox dividends to maintain its own rate and thus is sensitive to any movement of Fox shares on the Big Board.

National Screen Service was firm in a light turnover, gaining more than a point, while Technicolor, Fox Theatres A and Sentry Safety Control were restricted to narrow price movements.

Amusement bonds were remarkably firm in the face of a generally declining fixed interest-bearing securities market. Pathe 7s again featured with a run of four points to a new high for the year at 89, from which it eased off a couple of points. General Theatres Equipment convertible 6s moved up from a low of 62¾ to 68, subsequently selling off to around 64. Loew's issues were very dull and little changed, while Paramount bonds were steady in a fractional range.

Pittaluga Death Robs Italian Film Trade of Leader

Italy's motion picture industry suffered a blow in all three of its major branches—production, distribution and exhibition—through the death of Stefano Pittaluga, head of Cines-Pittaluga of Rome, leading producing organization of Italy, as well as operator of an extensive chain of theatres. His death on Sunday, April 7, was a shock to the trade, in both Europe and America. He was thought to have practically recovered from a recent slight illness.

Born in Genoa 47 years ago, Pittaluga began his career in the industry as a very young man, distributing pictures in Genoa. Soon he expanded his activity to northern Italy and from his offices in Turin he also directed a number of small theatres. Realizing the necessity of developing the Italian industry on a thoroughly modern foundation, he opened his first theatre, the Itala, in the central section of Turin at the time when Lombardi Film, Caesar Film and Ambrosio Film were at the height of their activity. Soon afterwards he entered exhibition in Genoa and other Italian cities.

Next he entered production. In the years of the World War he released a few pictures, but greater success began when he introduced American product, of such companies as Triangle, Fine Arts, Famous Players and Metro. After the war, with the cooperation of such leading business men as Ottolenghi and Levi of Turin, he produced the well known "The Machiste."

The Banca Commerciale Italiana now took an interest in the Pittaluga developments and with its cooperation he went on to his greatest triumphs, within a period of less than three years. He obtained control of the largest circuits of theatres in Italy, totaling more than 350 houses, and formed the Societa Anonima Stefano Pittaluga.

Then, to supply product for his own theatres and the many others that his company controlled, he established an office for the booking of American, English, German and French productions. In the face of the world business depression he continued to forge ahead, with the aid of sound and talking pictures. Recognizing the value of this new instrument, Pittaluga undertook the presentation of sound to a rather skeptical Italian people. He effected the amalgamation of his organization with Cines of Rome, reorganized Cines and established modern studios for talking picture production in Rome.

Pittaluga, who recently was made Commandatore of the Italian Crown, was a dynamic personality of decision and modern ideas. His forcefulness in business transactions combined with frankness and honesty made him one of the foremost figures in the industry in Europe.

He introduced his productions in foreign countries and recently in the United States through J. V. Cremonim of New York. Two of the first sound and talking productions, "Napoli Che Canta" and "La Canzone dell 'Amore," have been presented in several American cities.

Ontario Censor Has Deficit; Manitoba Passes 1,848 Films

Toronto—Ontario made a profit in 1930 of $32,567 on censoring fees, but lost $102,431 on operation of its studio.

The Manitoba board passed without alteration 1,848 of the 2,103 films submitted last year. Of the others, 56 were banned and 206 were deleted. There were 19 British films.

And Harry Let Her Slumber

Hollywood—Apropos of his flying activities, Harry Bannister recently launched into a discussion of the part aviation is playing in modernizing the backwoods regions which had never been reached by railroad or good roads.

"Soon," said Harry, "we will have no villages like the one at which a motorist stopped when a storm had washed out a bridge on the main road and made it necessary to use a detour.

"The motorist sought refuge from the rain in the only restaurant of the town.

" 'It looks like the flood,' he remarked to the waitress.

" 'Like what?' the girl asked.

" 'Like the flood. You've read of the flood and how the Ark landed on Mount Ararat, haven't you?'

" 'No sir,' confessed the waitress, 'You see no newspapers have been delivered here for over a week.' "

Screen Advertising on Trial with Allied

tracts, although the first issue of the reel will not be delivered until early June. Kinograms, insiders say, can make it pay with 2,000 accounts. When actual operations start in two months, Kinograms and Allied expect to have 3,000 theatres lined up.

Kinograms' present newsreel organization will be enlarged. With its Educational agreement already terminated and the deal for production of a Universal reel ending June 1, the Kinograms organization, headed by Capt. George McL. Baynes, will concentrate on the Allied tieup. Oscar Hanson is the contact between Allied States and Kinograms.

Financial arrangements with exhibitors playing the reel are more or less a state unit matter. The exhibitor will book the reel at straight rental charges and receive financial remuneration, depending on the size of his house, for showing the advertising contained in the reel. Whether all of the fees received by exhibitors will be turned over for support of the state and national Allied units is a matter for each state association to decide. At least part of the returns, however, will be claimed by each factor in the transaction.

A committee of Allied members will pass upon the "quality" of the advertising matter contained in each reel. This is to protect the exhibitors from obnoxious screen material. Each of the 104 annual issues will contain no more than 30 per cent of advertising matter, with the plan providing for non-advertising treatment of industrial phases of big business, that is to say, screen treatment will be given to the manufacture of a certain product, eliminating all but minor reference to the manufacturer's name.

Only Allied members will be solicited, at least until after sales possibilities in the Allied ranks have been covered.

Discusses Wide Film Obstacles

N. D. ("Nate") Golden, assistant chief of the motion picture division of the Department of Commerce, who, elsewhere on this page, predicts from two to five years will develop "before greatly increased color production may be anticipated."

Turnstile Idea Abandoned For Trans-Lux Theatres

Deciding that the original plan is impractical, the Trans-Lux Movies Corporation has decided to abandon the idea of having patrons enter its theatres through turnstiles operated by the insertion of a quarter. Since opening of the first theatre in New York a few weeks ago, it has been decided that patrons too often would have to hunt for places to get the proper change.

As a result, all Trans-Lux theatres, which employ rear projection and are to be operated on a basis of greatly reduced overhead. will have cashiers to make change and take the money for admission.

Decides Children Under 14 Will Be Barred From Stage

Philadelphia—Children under 14 will be prohibited from appearance on Pennsylvania stages, according to an opinion rendered by Judge Francis Brown, Jr.

A test case, involving Davey Lee, 9, screen player, was decided in favor of the state, on the ground that employing the child on the stage was a violation of the Child Labor Act.

Texas Senate Passes Sunday Bill, Now Awaiting Signature

Austin, Texas—The senate has passed a bill legalizing Sunday performances, similar to one passed two years ago but vetoed by the governor.

Sunday prohibition is openly disregarded in most cities in Texas, and has been for many years.

Big Increase in Usage of Color Seen After 2 to 5 More Years

Discovered: One Town Which Has No Crime Wave!

Hollywood (QP)—"We have no crime wave," said Sam Bradford, chief of police of the City of M-G-M. "We have none because we have an efficient and active police force. Just like other cities, we have traffic problems to meet, thievery and so forth. And besides we have a constant stream of embryonic gate crashers and sightseers to take care of, probably more than almost any other city of the size."

The "chief," with 30 years of active police service behind him, both in Seattle and Oklahoma, then explained the intricate peace service of a novel city, one with a large residential section, concentrated business section and huge industrial section.

"Just take our traffic department," he continued. "We have miles of streets, all busy ones. Our blocks are short and everything must be kept moving at intersections. The delay of a sound truck on the way to location would hold up an entire company. We have to have our 'stop streets' and we have a regular force to direct pedestrians and cars. We even have a parking problem for the ways must be kept clear. And though we have a fine fire prevention system, we have to have officers to make way for fire apparatus in case a blaze should start."

The police department is built like that of a large city, with chief, captain and lieutenants. M-G-M City keeps a force large enough to handle a city of 25,000 or more, and in time of greatest production has to put on still more men.

"But to come back to our lack of any crime wave," the "chief" went on. "Our difficulty is with outside people with light fingers. There has to be every type of article on the sets. We have no trouble with regular studio citizens, but at times we have thousands of extras and other outsiders to contend with, and occasionally these cause trouble."

Sues Circus for $1,040,000; Charges Effort to Monopolize

Chicago—Zack T. Miller of the Miller 101 Ranch, has filed a $1,040,000 damage suit against Sells-Floto, Ringling and affiliated circus operators, charging a monopoly in the circus business, and specifically, "enticing" Tom Mix from their employ.

This was done, according to the complaint, after Mix had been widely advertised, and was part of a conspiracy to drive independents out of the circus business.

"Nate" Golden Sees Wide Film Remaining on Shelf Until More Economical Method Develops

Washington—The "giant" screen and its ally, wide films, as a new departure in production-exhibition, will not become a widespread reality until such time as more economical methods for its operation and a standard wide film size is accepted by all companies, states N. D. ("Nate") Golden, assistant chief of the M. P. Division of the U. S. Dept. of Commerce.

Both color and wide films are being held in abeyance, though the industry anticipates increased color production during 1931, his government report states.

Color film, on the other hand, Golden says, is growing in popularity, and its value does not lie in its novelty, but in its intrinsic value as a portrayer of scenes in their natural state, Golden stated.

Discloses New Plan

To overcome one of the difficulties of production in the early days of color, it was necessary to double the length of the film and the number of still pictures per minute in order to gather in all the primary colors.

A plan has been recently developed, however, to superimpose one still picture upon another, so that all colors could be flashed simultaneously.

Under the old plan it was necessary for the film to be run off at a rate of 180 feet per minute, while under the new plan the normal rate of 90 feet per minute is correct.

In from two to five years, greatly increased color production may be anticipated, Golden predicts.

The giant screen and accompanying film development was undertaken, he said, in order to produce the optical illusion of three dimensions, one of the three major objectives of the industry. The other two, he explained, are sound and color. Mr. Golden gave the following additional information:

Sound has obviously succeeded and has become permanently established, while color is still in the developmental stage, and, although greatly advanced over the early efforts, much remains to be done.

Production in Abeyance

Difficulties arising from color-film production fall entirely upon the producer, while the difficulty of production and exhibition of the giant-size film fall with equal burden upon producer and exhibitor.

When the giant-size film and screen was first developed by motion picture engineers, different producing corporations adopted different gauged films for their production. From the original 35-millimeter old-style film, producers changed to 56, 65 and 70 millimeters. Because of the confusion brought about by these variations, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers recommended a standard giant film of 50 millimeters. None of the producers committed themselves to that standard, however, and none of them have really come around to its adoption.

Lewis Warner's Death Mourned As Severe Loss

Death of Lewis J. Warner, 22, who had just completed the first courses in the business training that was expected to place him eventually in the chair of his father, Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Bros., was the second tragedy in the Warner family. Sam Warner, one of the four brothers, died several years ago at the time that Vitaphone was coming into its own.

Lewis Warner's end on April 4 came directly as a result of double pneumonia, but the illness started with septic poisoning following a tooth extraction in the middle of February. He was on his way to Havana on a vacation at the time the poisoning set in. By plane he was taken from Havana to Miami and thence by a special Pullman to New York. A series of operations upon the infected jaw were necessitated and these so weakened the patient that blood transfusions were resorted to. The seven weeks' fight for life ended Saturday night, at Doctors' Hospital.

The body lay in state at Riverside Memorial Chapel until the services were conducted the morning of April 7 at Temple Emanu-El by Dr. Nathan Krass. Burial was at Salem Fields in Cypress Hills. The Warner offices in Chicago closed for the entire day, and branches throughout the world closed their doors from 11 A. M. to 1 P. M.

A graduate of Worcester Academy, where he was an outstanding athlete, Warner continued his education at Columbia, but left school to go into his father's business. This was at the time that Warner Bros. took over the Witmark music publishing house. The past year he had been centering his training on the theatre phase under Spyros Skouras, then head of the Warner circuit, at the same time acting as a general executive.

Lewis was the only son of Harry M. Warner. Besides his parents, two younger sisters survive, Doris and Betty. Jack Warner, Jr., is the only other son in the families of the Warner brothers.

Throws Out Suit Against M-G-M

Judge Frank J. Coleman, United States District court, refused to grant a preliminary injunction to Ivan Abramson in his intended plagiarism suit against M-G-M on the film, "Reducing."

Abramson contended the company had plagiarized from the picture, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," produced in 1917, and asked all profits from the film and $250,000 in damages. The judge, after reviewing the case, said: "I believe it would be merely a waste of the court's time to have a trial of the issues."

"City Lights" Is Bringing Children Back to Theatre

Providence—Child attendance has increased since the opening of "City Lights" a month ago.

Exhibitors are anticipating a similar result from Paramount's "Skippy."

Pathe's Soviet News

Pathe News, beginning with the current mid-week issue, is presenting in six successive issues of the reel, the various phases of the revolutionary Russian Soviet five-year plan of industrial development. The first instalment of the "serial," pictures the wide expanse of territory and the variety of races affected by the "plan," with succeeding issues going more into detail on the situation. An editor's introduction precedes the pictorial records, noting in conclusion that "these pictures make no plea either for or against Russia's drive."

Columbia Starts New Sales Plan

Columbia has inaugurated a new sales policy, with Jack Cohn, treasurer, supervising, assisted by a sales cabinet of 10 members. They are Lou Metzger, sales director; Abe Montague, Joe McConville, Lou Weinberg, Morris Safier, Wayne Pierson, road-show director; Joe Goldberg, West; Phil Dunas, Middlewest; Sam Moscow, South; and Phil Meyers, New York.

With the exception of Goldberg and Moscow, all members are in New York conferring with Cohn. "Dirigible" and "Subway Express" head the company's releases.

Radio Broadcasts Dialogue of Features Through KFI

Hollywood (QP)—Radio is using a new system of business building to aid exhibitors booking Radio product. The studio here is sponsoring a concentrated broadcast of its features. The dialogue of each picture is boiled down and broadcast by the Book Drama Players, headed by Guy Hedlund.

Thus far, "Cimarron," "Bachelor Apartment" and "Millie" have been radioed in concentrated form, with commendable response. This week the players are presenting "Behind Office Doors," recently completed by Melville Brown, director. Station KFI is being used.

18 States Reported Seeking Billboard Tax to Cut Number

The National Association of Real Estate Boards reports 18 states seeking taxation on billboards to cut down the number, particularly in scenic spots.

Sticks for Slaps And Canned Bark New Sound Aids

Hollywood—(QP)—It's hard to believe your own ears in the talkies.

A trip through the sound departments of Hollywood studios reveals a weird assortment of new-fangled gadgets to imitate various noises.

One of the strangest is a wooden box with a key protruding from the side. When you turn the key there comes forth the perfect imitation of canaries singing.

Pounding of hoofs is duplicated by rubber plungers working on a wooden board. A can with a resin string produces a dog's bark. Hinged sticks are slapped together to re-create the sound of foot-steps. Other sticks imitate a slap in the face.

If you turn the crank of a large box the sound of a speeding train is evoked. A twist of another crank on a different box will "convince" you that a window glass has been crashed.

Files reveal they have instruments to imitate crickets, cathedral chimes, crying babies, mooing cows, quacking ducks, squalling tom-cats, snarling tigers and innumerable other noises.

Whenever possible, real sound effects are recorded and filed away in the library. Any unusual noise heard on a location will be recorded and tucked away for future reference. One of Hollywood's rare thunderstorms recently sent technicians scurrying to the roofs of numerous studios to get a genuine peal of thunder. Other crews have spent weeks at the harbor recording steamboat whistles and dock sounds.

Not Interested, Repeats Capone

Chicago—Al Capone, personally, has denied to Quigley Publications that any $1,000,000 film offer has been made to him. He did say that a man, representing to be from film interests, approached him in a Miami hotel last year, and that he merely "laughed," probably in the inimitable Capone way.

"How would a picture offer strike you now?" he was asked.

"It wouldn't interest me," he replied.

The vagrancy charge on which he was being held while interviewed was dropped for lack of evidence. Capone is not a vagrant, at any rate.

SMPE Announces Tentative Program for Spring Meet

Hollywood—The tentative program for the spring meeting of the Society of M. P. Engineers, May 25 to 29, indicates that as much time as possible will be allowed Eastern members to visit studios.

Only one afternoon session will be devoted to papers. Two technical meetings will be held at night so that studio workers may attend. A banquet is scheduled for the Hotel Roosevelt Wednesday evening.

GANGSTER FILMS BRING MOST CUTS

Originality characterizes Educational's Chicago's Prosperity drive for May playdates, now in full swing there. The first advertising matter mailed to exhibitors calls attention to the drive and encloses a "deposit" slip for May playdates and the classification of product desired. "Deposits" are made with the "First Educational Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago." These slips serve as confirmations for Educational's booker. A "bank book" recording the "deposits" is retained by the exhibitor. Followup material, similar in nature to savings account paraphernalia, has been prepared and will be distributed later. Educational's booking department has also been given the appearance of a bank depository to further carry out the idea of the Prosperity drive.

Half of Chicago Deletions In Crime Pictures

But Censor Board Notes "Definite Improvement" in Subject Matter of Short Product

Chicago (QP)—Gangster pictures are the particular aversion of the Chicago board of censors. This is revealed by a further analysis of the board's annual report to Acting Commissioner of Police John Alcock. The "alky" and artillery pictures were the targets of almost 50 per cent of the total cleansing orders issued by the board in 1930.

Of the 2,959 cuts ordered in the year, 1,358 were in gangster pictures, the report discloses. The views or dialogue deleted from these pictures, the censors say, showed disrespect for law enforcement agencies; glorification of the gangster or outlaw; justification of murder and brutality; methods of evading apprehension and justice; methods of planning and committing criminal acts, and collusion between law authorities and the underworld.

Protests Court Orders

One such picture, which was banned in its entirety by the board, was exhibited by court order, the report adds. The exhibition was cited as a "deplorable instance," illustrating the limitations of censorship authority.

Second on the list of deletions, and characterized in the report as "the most dangerous phase of talking pictures," was sex immorality. In this category 850 cuts were ordered. Of these the report says:

"There is a general tendency in talking pictures to present a 'modern' attitude with its elusive standards in such a subtle or confusing manner that it is impossible for the large majority of picture audiences to make any distinction between the rightness and the fallacy of that attitude. This tendency is evidenced in an increasing number of productions having for their themes, or incorporating in some form, aspects of illicit relations between the sexes, illegitimacy, disrespect for or ridicule of the marriage state, and other forms of sex immorality. These comprise the most dangerous phase of talking pictures. Very little of true love or romance is pictured."

"Vulgar" or "indecent" views or references are next on the list of deletions, with 350 such cuts ordered. These were centered largely in short subjects which, according to the report, incorporated much of the worst entertainment of the old variety stage.

Cites Definite Improvement

"There has been a significant change in the quality of these short acts in the last three months," the report comments. "A definite improvement in subject matter has been noted."

The remainder of the cuts included 47 deemed by the censors to be racially offensive, and 35 considered to be offensive to religion or to sects. There were 37 rejections of complete pictures, of which 15 were features and the remainder shorts.

"Pink" or "adults only" permits were issued for 45 features, an increase over other years.

HIT-OR-MISS PRODUCTION

By HAROLD B. FRANKLIN

AN industry that spends approximately one hundred fifty million dollars each year on production ought to establish methods that would insure a higher proportion of box-office successes. Under present conditions the element of chance remains too big a factor in determining results. While there are studio executives who have shown a flair in guiding production into successful channels, this branch of the industry as a whole is governed by a hit-or-miss" policy.

H. B. Franklin

For four years I have been privileged to observe production from a perspective accorded few. Over 95 per cent of the pictures made in Hollywood were previewed in theatres which I controlled, giving me an opportunity to observe, not alone the pictures produced, but to come in close contact with those who made them, as well as the conditions under which they were made. Continuous contact with the box-offices of over 500 theatres placed me in the unique position of knowing which organizations and which producers came closest in determining box-office values.

Out of approximately 450 pictures produced during the past year, scarcely 100 were real box office. Such a ratio is entirely out of proportion to the investment of effort and money in the making of motion pictures. If this is a fact, serious consideration must be given to production methods if the continued interest of the public is to be maintained.

I do not mean to imply that the studios are manned by inefficients. As a matter of fact, few industries can boast of a manpower of higher intelligence, or who are burdened with as many responsibilities. Many studio executives are extraordinarily industrious, and are men of talent, ability and acumen. The fault is not with the personnel, but with the system that has enveloped production with many important companies. The solution of this problem concerns not any one producer alone, but the entire industry. The success of every branch of the industry right through production, distribution and exhibition is dependent on a steady flow of good pictures, not from one or two studios, but from most of them. Theatres as a whole cannot reflect a prosperous condition if the supply of good pictures comes from limited sources. The pictures produced in Hollywood determine the prosperity of the theatre in Oshkosh as it does in the most important cities. Therefore, the box offices of the country can be depended upon as being the surest gauge in measuring the qualifications of those responsible for production activities, and the box offices of the country indicate that all is not right in Hollywood.

The studio whose production schedule is dependent on a single individual, no matter how capable, has not safeguarded itself sufficiently against the human equation, and gambles entirely more than it should, both as to the merit of its pictures as well as the diversification of its program. There are studio executives who consider themselves capable of passing on every important production detail of twenty to forty pictures a year, yet a Belasco considers himself fortunate if he succeeds in producing two or three successes. Let us assume that one having such superhuman qualities does exist. How long can such a man continue to function? I have known studio executives to work under a tension of wrought nerves which made it difficult to discuss problems with them normally. Is it any wonder that they are surrounded by so many "yes men"? Such executives finally get an exaggerated and abnormal point of view, a condition that is finally reflected in the pictures they make.

There is a tendency to surround themselves with favorites, and in instances relatives, making it difficult for much talent to break into the inner circle. Persons who are engaged in the making of pictures must, to a degree, park their personality outside before approaching such executives; yet this is a creative business. This policy of isolation has made it difficult for those responsible for production to maintain proper contact with the public. Sympathetic understanding of public requirements cannot always be acquired through secondary channels, yet studio executives to a degree hold themselves aloof from the rest of the world.

An insidious custom fostered by most studios is the engaging of talent through a favored and exclusive agent. One might as well storm a fortress as break through these agents, and some of these, in a measure, are responsible for many of the exorbitant salaries. Is it any wonder that new talent is discouraged, and in many instances, stifled?

Real values are lost sight of. A director or player through chance scores a success, and his salary and prestige soar to unjustified heights, yet he may not have another success. Under present conditions executives who should be only concerned with production, occupy much of their time with company politics. Where such a condition continues to exist, production from that source must continue on a low level.

"There are studio executives who consider themselves capable of passing on every important production detail of twenty to forty pictures a year, yet a Belasco considers himself fortunate if he succeeds in producing two or three successes."

The production staff of many companies has built a Chinese wall around itself. In contrast to other important industries, few indeed are given a chance to step into more important positions. During the past five years, new executive talent was given an opportunity only where there has been a complete change of management, and in one instance the infusion of this new point of view resulted in positively brilliant accomplishments, and brought distinction to an otherwise prosaic organization.

In almost any other industry new executive talent is not only encouraged and sought, but actually cultivated. A new point of view is the very life blood of any creative industry. It should be the principal business of the leaders of the motion picture industry to encourage and foster the development of creative ability, and where found, should be given an opportunity to express itself. Encouragement along this line will rebound to the credit of every production chief. The motion picture will continue to grow only to the extent that new talent of every description is injected into its activities.

The responsibilities of production should be divided among a greater number of executives. No production executive should be assigned to more than four or five pictures a year if they are to merit a good box office rating. A division of responsibilities along some such plan would bring greater diversification to the production schedule of each organization. On the other hand, every production executive should be given full sway in the preparation and the making of each picture assigned to him. This would bring a healthy competitive situation in each studio. Pictures would be given individual attention and would have every advantage of stimulated effort. Studios would cultivate a larger staff of production executives, which, in turn, would have the tendency to encourage additional talent in other departments, and no organization would be dependent upon the effort of one or two super-showmen. Successful production in the final analysis is based on common sense and plenty of preparation. Successful production is not dependent on geniuses or secret formulas.

Those who have been responsible for good box office product will probably concur with most of the views expressed herein. At any rate, every one interested in the progress of the screen will be interested in the point of view of one who has been close enough to view the problem from an unprejudiced perspective.

Promote Spirit of Friendship and Act As Elixir for 27 Nations, Says Wunder

Hollywood—Sixty per cent of the short subjects made last year were comedies. The remainder being travelogues, sport features and educational subjects, Clinton Wunder, executive manager of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences, told the Los Angeles Breakfast Club.

"Motion picture comedy is of value because it produces a spirit of friendship within an audience and subsequently spreads into factory, shop, office and home," Wunder said. "Wide smiles on the part of individuals mean wide smiles for the masses. These smiles have helped weather the financial depression."

He said picture comedies acted as an elixir for 27 nations.

Screen As An Ad Media Discounted By Agency Chief

Limitations of the screen as an advertising medium are very definite, in the opinion of Richard E. Strobridge, secretary of Newell-Emmett, national advertising agency, who believes the screen "is dedicated to the duty of entertaining those who pay their admission at the box-office, and, therefore, it can offer nothing but entertainment if it is to keep faith with the public."

"This fact alone," Strobridge states, "places it at once in the category of secondary advertising media, for its sole purpose, that of entertainment, bars its use for direct advertising or sales appeal."

In making this statement, to Printers' Ink, Strobridge said he was voicing no new thought in expressing his conviction that the screen can in no way be substituted for newspapers or magazines.

"We see no escape from the basic principle," Strobridge concluded, "that the advertiser must please and entertain his audience. If we can place pictures on the screen that bring sufficient pleasure to theatre audiences, the fact that these pictures are sponsored by an advertiser, far from causing hostility, should arouse a feeling of gratitude to the manufacturer responsible for a new entertainment."

Pastor Charges Film Ads Show Ignoring of Industry's Codes

Chicago Theologian Urges Woman's Club to Support Four "Reform" Movements

Chicago—By reading motion picture advertisements authored by Chicago and St. Louis circuit theatres, Dr. Fred Eastman of the Chicago Theological Seminary endeavored to show the representatives of 100 state, county, and city women's organizations, meeting at the Chicago Woman's Club here, that the industry's Production Code and the theatre's Advertising Code are ineffectual and repeatedly are being disregarded by the producers and their theatres.

After describing the Hays organization and its public relations department as "agencies created by the motion picture trust to convert the public, not the movies," and referring to it as "a naive organization that has no power to eliminate a single foot of objectionable film," Dr. Eastman urged the women to support four so-called "reform" movements, which, he promised them, would make motion pictures everything the women desired them to be. The reforms he asks are:

Passage of Senator Dill's bill calling for a federal investigation of the industry.

Previewing by the state department before shipment of all films designed for export.

Passage of the Brookhart bill calling for elimination of block booking and blind buying.

Public support of the Chicago board of censors and elimination of "pink" or "adults-only" permits for picture exhibition in Chicago were asked by Father Dineen, a Chicago clergyman identified with exhibition reform movements here.

Separate programs for both children and adults were recommended by Mrs. Alice Miller Mitchell, former chief censor of the Chicago board, as a solution of the "child movie problem."

Other speakers at the meeting included Nelson A. Green, editor of Educational Screen; Mrs. O. E. Brooks, chairman of the joint committee on motion pictures of the Chicago Woman's Club; and Paul Hutchinson, editor of Christian Century. Mrs. Arthur Plank was chairman.

part of the present financing program, have been sold by the company.

Clarke early in the week foreshadowed the withdrawal of Halsey-Stuart from present refinancing by omitting the name of Charles B. Stuart, vice-president of Halsey-Stuart, in announcing the composition of the directorate he would recommend for election at the forthcoming annual meeting.

Halsey-Stuart had been expected to continue in the Fox picture. The company had previously been prominent in Fox financial affairs, having underwritten Fox Theatre notes and led in the reorganizing plan of a year ago, when Clarke purchased control of Fox from William Fox. Halsey-Stuart's short term financing plan was accepted by Clarke at that time pending betterment of the stock market, when arrangements would be made for permanent financing.

When Clarke brought Glenn Griswold to Fox Film recently as a vice-president in charge of public relations and financial publicity matters, he had in mind the creation of a new type of liaison officer between the industry and Wall Street. Thus Griswold was prominently active in the current financing arrangements. Griswold had been editor of the Chicago Journal of Commerce prior to joining Fox.

with the National Fire Protection Association for 10 years in safeguarding against the film hazard and endeavoring to confine nitrocellulose film to professional use, keeping it from amateurs who may not understand its hazards and who do not have proper facilities for safe storing and handling. As a result of this co-operative activity, fire losses in exchanges have been reduced to a small fraction of previous totals.

Point to Recent Fires

Regulations adopted in 1919 and amended in minor details in 1922 and 1926 have proved fully satisfactory in application to exchanges, but with new developments it seemed advisable to revise them to bring them up to date and make them more inclusive in application, according to the association. The need for widening the scope of the regulations, it is pointed out, was indicated by a number of serious fires the past few years.

Film of the professional type is a nitrocellulose product considered particularly hazardous by authorities because of its ease of ignition, the fact that it will decompose or burn without the necessity of an external air supply, and in combustion may generate poisonous and explosive gases. This variety of film, however, is distinguished from the narrow width amateur film printed on so-called safety stock, which presents no more of a fire hazard than a similar quantity of paper.

A. H. Nuckolls, chemical engineer of Underwriters' Laboratories, Chicago, is chairman of the committee which will present this report.

Much of the time of the convention will be devoted to action on more than a score of similar technical reports embodying revised standards for the control of specific fire hazards and for new methods of fire fighting.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 72

By F. H. Richardson

THE question: Tell us exactly what the conscientious motion picture sound projectionist who expects to get the best possible results from the horns will do every day with reference to the exciting lamps. Tell us just what will happen if the exciting lamp filament is sagged. Explain why this effect will be brought about. Tell us just what the effect will be of using an exciting lamp which has discoloration on the interior of its globe. Tell us just how you would proceed to test the sidewise adjustment of the exciting lamp filament image at the sound gate aperture.

Of all these I have selected the anwers of Evans and Rau, Billings, Boyer, Dodson, Henderson, Turk, Van Vaulkenburg and G. E. Doe as best, and from them I have selected the reply of Tom Turk for publication, though the eight named are essentially even in quality. Here is what brother Turk says:

"The projectionist who proposes to get the best possible results from his sound apparatus must pay very close attention to certain things concerning the exciting lamp and its optical train. First of all, each day before starting the show he must examine the exciting lamp critically, making sure that (a) its globe is perfectly clean inside and out; (b) That its filament is perfectly straight; (c) That the lamp is in perfect adjustment so that the focus at the slit is correct in all details. He must make sure that it is making good electrical contact. He must check up and know that the exciting lamp current value is just what it should be. If too high the lamp will not last through its rated period of life. If too low there will not be sufficient sound volume, except at a too high fader setting, and perhaps not even then. Also if the exciter lamp current be too high I have found the fader action to be unsatisfactory—too sensitive.

"If the exciting lamp filament be sagged, then of course its image at the mechanical slit will also not be in a straight line, and since the slit itself is a straight line, the two cannot be made to match properly throughout the slit length. The result will be loss of volume and to a certain extent sound distortion.

"Discoloration on the interior of the exciting lamp globe results, of course, in light absorption, hence loss in sound volume, provided such discoloration is low enough to be opposite the filament. Discoloration begins at the top of the lamp and gradually works downward. Also such discoloration results in tonal injury, because of the impurity of the light which is not so absorbed. I am not altogether certain as to this latter, but believe it must be true. I have talked with our service engineer concerning this point. He also would not express a positive opinion, but is of the opinion that the effect would be set up."

(Your editor also is not entirely certain, but like the service engineer and brother Turk, believes tone quality would be injured by globe discoloration, for the reason that surely a certain amount of color would be added to the light by the deposit it must pass through. F. H. R.)

"In order to test the sidewise adjustment of the lamp filament at the sound gate aperture . . ." No, we will stop right there. The answer of friend Turk to this particular item is to some extent faulty. Sorry, but that is the fact. I have therefore concluded to substitute the answers of Evans and Rau and Earl Boyer to this phase of the matter. Here is what Evans and Rau have to say:

"To test the sidewise adjustment of the exciting lamp filament image at the sound track, secure a piece of negative film and thread same through the sound gate, with the emulsion side toward the light. Then light the exciting lamp and allow the light from it to shine on the film while slowly counting to 10. Then turn the flywheel of projector until the film has moved about a fraction of a sprocket hole. Repeat the count while light is shining on film. Do this several times. Then remove the film and there will be a series of lines on that part of the film whic hwas exposed to the light. These lines are imprints of the image of the slit. By cutting off a bit of sound film and comparing it with the test strip, with sprocket holes perfectly matched, it can be seen whether the slit image is correctly centered sidewise or not."

And now we will listen to brother Boyer, who explains thusly:

"The sidewise adjustment of the exciter lamp: There are sound equipments that have a fixed sidewise position for the exciter lamp, hence this adjustment is not necessary. Other equipments require this adjustment and some sound heads are constructed so that this test can be made with the eye. In the front part of the sound head there is a hole through the housing in line with the slit in the lens system and the filament of the exciter lamp. The photoelectric cell is removed and a piece of very dark film is placed in the sound gate, the exciter light is turned on. Now you can look through this hole in front of the sound head and see the image of the slit on this dark film that is over the aperture in the sound gate. The exciter lamp is now moved sidewise back and forth until a position is found where the image will be the brightest. The adjustment is now complete and the exciter lamp's filament will be in perfect line sidewise with the aperture in the sound gate. The image will have a uniform brightness all the way across the sound tract. There are other ways to make this test, but I have found this method to be more practical."

Would be glad to have the comment of some of you chaps on just what you have found to be the most practical method of sidewise adjustment.

Simplifying Sound

RCA Photophone this week issued to the trade a "Handbook for Projectionists," a 215 page, splendidly presented manual in which appears a comprehensive description of its apparatus and the elementary fundamentals of an understanding of its operation.

In addition to explaining the "how" and "why" of Photophone operation, RCA "aims to give this information in such a fashion as to enable the projectionist to intelligently recognize, locate and remedy such minor defects as might occur during the operation of the equipment, and make whatever minor adjustments which may become necessary."

Survey on How to Improve the Release Print Standard

MOTION PICTURE HERALD PROJECTION DEPARTMENT

This is a national survey to get the constructive opinions of projectionists who have had experience with the Standard Release Print. It is sponsored by the Technical Bureau of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, with the cooperation of the Projection Advisory Council and the American Projection Society.

The Standard will be enforced as it is or changed, depending on what theatre projectionists want.

Since the producing companies started to release reels with uniform leaders and cues, many letters of comment have been received. Most of these said the Standard was a big step forward. Many also offered suggestions for improvement. The questions raised by these suggestions have been analyzed and it has been decided to put them up to the projectionists of the country for an answer.

Every projectionist is urged to give his opinion and experience. This will guide the producers in making Standard prints so they will be best for threading and change-over in all types of houses. The improvement of the Standard and its maintenance by projectionists and exchanges will mean that no projectionist will have to work with a print that has been mutilated with punch holes, pencil marks, scratches, or unnecessary patches.

The cues in the Standard Release Print were intentionally made fairly large to start with. Now that projectionists have had experience with the Standard the cues can be made smaller, or their length or position can be changed if desirable. Or the cues can be done away with entirely if any better plan is offered that can be put into effective and economic operation in all the talking picture theatres throughout the country.

Are the cues about right now?.....If not, suggest improvements in size, number of frames, position or any combination of these. In other words:

Is this the best place?.....Should they be in the lower right hand corner instead?.....

Do you have any other suggestions on cues?.....

While many pictures now being shown were cut and released before the Standard went into effect, the number of non-Standard prints will decrease. Once a picture has been released on Standard the responsibility for keeping it so is on the exchanges and the projectionists as outlined in the instruction booklet.

In general are the leaders and cues in good condition on the Standard prints you get? That is: The synchronizing leader?.....The start motor cue?.....The change-over cue? .....The final eight frames after the change-over cue?.....Is any exchange sending you prints released on Standard but which the exchange has not properly inspected and kept according to Standard specifications?.....

Remote Control Sound Recorder Is Demonstrated

Chicago (QP)—A new recording system, which uses no mechanical means for recording sound on films, has been given a first remote control test. It was built for the Whitman Company of New York at the Jenkins & Adair laboratories. The system has a frequency range of as high as 14,000 cycles.

In the test, 5,000 feet were shot in the sound studio of the Chicago Film Laboratories, with the sound sent by telephone wires to the Jenkins laboratory eight miles away. Synchronization is obtained by running the motors of the cameras in the studio and the laboratory at identical speeds.

The value of the remote control idea lies in obviating the necessity of moving sound recording equipment.

MUSIC AND TALENT

NEW F. & M. PRODUCTION STUDIO ENTRENCHES STAGE ENTERTAINMENT

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending April 9

The Boris Petroff stageshow, "Carnival of Youth," featuring Charlie Davis and His Joy Gang opens to a spring-time setting in which the band, led by Davis, plays a hot number as little Tommy Wonder does a mean strut routine. Tommy incorporates splits, strut and snake-hips in this new dance of his and gets a good reception for it. His encore consisted of his well known waltz routine which he does with a girl dummy tied to each foot.

Davis and his band of 15 musicians and showmen follow with the playing of "Reaching for the Moon" and "99 Out of 100." Davis proves himself a great leader, a personable and likeable chap and above all he and his boys are versatile. They earned the best applause of the show.

A different type of announcement, a singing introduction of Anna Chang, was next made by Davis, who led the band in Chinese music as Anna entered through a bower or arch of flowers. She appeared as a demure little girl in pajama costume, and then surprised the audience by singing, "When You Fall in Love," in a most pleasing blues voice. She received a fine reception.

Charlie Hill, comedian, pianist and monologist, had the house boisterously laughing at his funny psychology on the origin of songs. He demonstrated and proved himself right to the amazement and pleasure of the audience.

Dub Taylor, harmonist, came in at the finish of Hill's act. Bernice and Emily, two young, good looking and hard working girls, received a great reception at the finish of their act of acrobatic dancing which they did mainly on a flight of stairs.

The Allen Foster Girls do a "drum and tap" routine for the finale. The show caught was but half of the regular time for this unit. It was cut on account of the length of the feature picture, "Skippy." The house was packed and the audience apparently enjoyed the entire show.

Anne Lee Anderson

Quite the newest thing in theatre circles for the state of Oklahoma, and as far as can be learned, in the entire Southwest, is the new mistress of ceremonies for the Warner theatre in Oklahoma City. The young woman is none other than the diminutive little blonde, Anne Lee Anderson, 18 years old, of Memphis, Tenn.

Several weeks ago Manager J. F. Schoeppel decided to augment his RKO vaudeville programs each week with local talent. Miss Anderson, who had done similar work at the Warner's Liberty, was called in. Now in her pleasing Southern dialect she calls the numbers on the RKO bill, ballyhooing for the various actors and prepares the audience for the local talent number.

She had not done public stage work before coming to Oklahoma City. During Easter week she had a life-long ambition realized when she was featured on the vaudeville bill in Southern melodies and special dance numbers.

Boston and Seattle Organists Visit Noonday Club, N. Y. C.

Ann Coffyn, organist at the Egleston theatre, Boston, visited New York last week for one of her short and snappy sojourns. While dining at Harry (Pop) Blair's Noonday Club she was introduced to Stan Cannon, erstwhile organist at the Paramount and Fox theatres, Seattle. Cannon is in town awaiting a new assignment.

36 Cities Playing Units of Fox Affiliate

Plant on West Coast Has Floor Space of 50,000 Square Feet; 250 Employes

By ED DAWSON

Are talking pictures driving the stageshow into the discard? You heard a lot about it in 1929, less in 1930, and this year—

Completion of one of the largest studios devoted exclusively to stage production.

And in Hollywood of all places!

Throwing this defy at talkerdom are a sister and brother, Fanchon & Marco, who 12 years ago were a dancing act in vaudeville.

Today they head a great organization affiliated with Fox Theatres Corporation employing 2,000 performers, producing vaudeville and unit presentations in 36 cities—a new act almost every week. Two years ago, when the talkies waxed so strong in the song-and-dance field that it looked as if the stage unit was doomed, Fanchon & Marco booked only 22 weeks.

Because Fanchon & Marco believe the public fancy is veering back to live performers, this large stage studio has become a fact.

Fifty thousand square feet of floor space are occupied by the studio: seven large buildings with a staff of 250 persons. In the new home an "Idea" can be conceived, cast, rehearsed and made ready for its nation-wide tour without any member of the production staff leaving the buildings.

The month of rehearsal in the great rehearsal halls is interspersed with trips to the costume department. Costumes were designed and ordered weeks before the troup was engaged, and the garments must be fitted to the various troupers. A whole section of the Hollywood Fanchon & Marco "home" is devoted to seamstresses who make and fit the gorgeous costumes of an "Idea." The limitations imposed on garments by the demands of convention are lifted here. Gowns such as madame might not conceive are shaped in the deft fingers of the corps of dressmakers. Extravaganzas of what every woman would like to wear cover the tables of this extraordinary workshop. And there are crazy garments made in this place, too. Calico cows . . . skeleton costumes for chorus numbers . . . anything which has been ordered as a garment for part of an "Idea" is made here.

The scenery and drop department is doing its own variety of stuff while the acts are in rehearsal. In huge lofts skilled workmen are building, and painting, using tiny models from the designers as their patterns. White canvas becomes a vehicle for a trip into the lands of fancy. Skies are bluer, lakes deeper, mountain crags craggier . . . the world's wonders more

Omaha Orpheum

Week ending April 2

The "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" by Liszt, featuring Frank Strawn, pianist, is the opening stage number, with "Eddie" and his R-K-Olians in the pit playing the obliggato. Others on the week's bill include Sidney Tracey and Bessie Hay, Nelson Clifford and Marie Marion, and a company of nine operatic singers headed by Caesar Rivoli.

In the Tracey-Hay act, there is a rather replete group of dance numbers. In their first appearance, a third member of their act, a youth, accompanies them on a piano. He later also sings "O Give Me Something to Remember You By." In their next dance Tracey does considerable balancing and swinging of Miss Hay, presenting a dance in æsthetic-athletic style. Her share of the number is a toe dance. He next dances a tap number. Their last number is the presentation of an Apache dance.

"Just Dumb" is the name of the comedy skit offered by Clifford and Marion. Miss Marion is the clown of the act, a mistress at facial expression and ability to clown with her body. Clifford recites to music something about the uselessness of arguing with a wife, when she reappears in a most gaudy red and green dress and red hat, with large stems of goldenrod dangling before her. She also brings a cornet with her and finally leaves without playing, except for a few measures of what was asked to be "Ramona" but actually was "My Old Kentucky Home." They clown along with the pit musicians and she finally sings "When My Dreams Come True." More clowning follows and the act closes with her song, "I Love You, I'm Yours."

"The Melody Parade," introduced with a drop front stage showing in black and gray a mixture of musical interest, fantastically done in affected modernistic fashion. Caesar Rivoli, leading the pit orchestra for the act, presents his conception of the "St. Louis Blues," the curtain rising and revealing three men and four women seated and standing nonchalantly upon and along a stone fence. They wear calicoes, polka dots, bandannas, straw hats, etc. Rivoli from the pit then gives his own impersonations of Johann Straus, Franz Liszt, Suppe and John Philip Sousa, the orchestra playing compositions of each and Rivoli wearing masks and affecting the conductorial peculiarities of each with striking effect and hearty, appreciative applause from the house. The last of his group is presented from the stage. It is of Victor Herbert, the group of singers representing the "Fortune Teller," "Mlle. Modiste," "Sweethearts" and "Babes in Toyland," singing "Kiss Me Again." Then back of them a second curtain rises and in the center of the stage is a trumpeter in white and still farther back, elevated, Caesar himself, both of them in pantomine to appear as statues. It is a picturesque scene.

Salt Lake Orpheum

Week ending March 31

One of the most entertaining and all-around stage and screen shows seen at the Orpheum in many weeks is headed by Johnny Burke, soldier-monologist, who entertains with sure-fire comedy patter of his army experiences. He provides more fun with musical numbers.

Jarvis, Harrison and company have a new idea for making laughs, called "Twenty Gallons of Gas," which produces a bombardment of fun and introduces a youngster in well-presented dance numbers.

Wilton Sisters, with a selection of delightful melodies and Mae Falls, Johnny Reading and Ted Boyce in what they call "Versatile Doings," complete the bill.

"Kept Husbands" is on the screen.

Denver Denver

Week ending April 2

The outstanding features of the stage bill at the Denver this week were the junior chorus of twenty-five and the Easter overture of the Denver Grand Orchestra, directed by Fred Schmitt. The youngsters, members of the Denver Post Kiddie Club, sang the Russian religious chorus, "Kamennoi Ostrow," and the manner in which they sang it was a revelation. The music was arranged for the girls by Miss Geraldine O'Neill, musical director of the club, and Fred Schmitt rehearsed them into perfection. The orchestra presented an overture appropriate to the season and it was well received.

The stage show, a Publix, "On With the Dance," was a splurge of nonsense, melody and footwork. The opening setting, with a medallion background, showed the stagehand spread out more than usual. Dave Craig merely ran the show and the audience missed his usual vocal offering. It's not so good, either, for patrons to expect something and not get it. Folk here like his singing and want it every week. Ted Leary, hiccoughing artist and comedian, helped Dave with his m. c. work. Gus and Will tapped a military number and the mechanical dance of Erner and Fisher also went over well. The Fred Evans ballet and a specialty dancer did some nice work and the finale was better than usual, using giant musical instruments for a good closing flash.

Omaha World

Week ending March 26

Under the leadership of Frank Hodek, the orchestra plays an overture of popular airs, including parts also of "Toreador," before the stageshow.

The stageshow opens with the World band upon the stage, Orville Rennie, m. c., directing. The musicians are in an oriental setting, a nomadic tent in orange and black stripes. A style revue, under the auspices of a local department store, is conducted during the stage performances, interspersing acts. A stairway leading down from center backstage and seeming to be a part of the oriental tent is used to introduce the various gowns, street to evening, the girls descending singely and in pairs from time to time.

On the vaudeville bill for the week are the Letts sisters, three harmony singers; the eight girls known as the World Rockets; Jack & Jerry, who clog dance on roller skates, and Clifton & Brant, who do eccentric tap dance numbers and a fiddle stunt in which the instrument seemingly falls to pieces, reminding one of a "Taming of the Shrew" scene.

The World Rockets first appear in a dance number wearing gaily colored pajamas and colored wide-rimmed straw hats, this fitting in with the style revue idea. The Letts sisters sing "The Little Things in Life," "You're Driving Me Crazy" and medleys of other popular airs. Jack & Jerry, in white clothes and on their roller skates, get a big hand from the house in the clog dance number. Orville Rennie sings "Lady of the Evening," when evening gowns are in revue.

Roxy Concerts Resumed

The Roxy Symphony Concerts, recently discontinued, will be resumed Sunday morning, April 12, being broadcast over the NBC network.

Forbes Directs Band, Too

New Orleans—Lou Forbes, orchestra leader, hereafter will direct the stage band as well at the Saenger, acting as master of ceremonies.

Stageshows Are Entrenched by New F. & M. Studio

wonderful as they are brought to the theatre from the Fanchon & Marco shops.

The efficiency code of the organization is well represented in the scenery department. Paints in a variety of colors are in constant use in this unit of the studio . . . and the pots containing them are kept heated on a special steam table in order to insure instantaneous fluidity of the pigments.

Carpenter shop requirements are strenuous in the Fanchon & Marco studio. Every stage production demands "hand tailored" woodwork in surprising quantities. A corps of workmen is maintained permanently in the shops of the Hollywood studio, doing nothing but construction of act settings.

A staff of electrical technicians also forms an important part of the studio. Lighting effects, majored as a stage feature by the Fanchon & Marco producers, are planned and tried out in the studio. This phase of the revue production is steadily gaining in importance as tests on theatre audiences have indicated that modernistic illumination effects add greatly to the attraction of shows. Many of the "Ideas" on tour have highly skilled electricians traveling with them to handle the intricate switchboards which control the startling electrical "Ideas."

Spacious store rooms are contained in the studio constituting a veritable museum of the theatre. Uniforms, enough for whole divisions of an army . . . musical instruments . . . dancing slippers enough for a nation of centipedes . . . paraphernalia for almost any kind of an "Idea" which might be conceived. All are contained in the studio morgue.

Fanchon & Marco have provided an unique angle to the stage business in their entering to talented beginners. They brought out Mary Lewis, Nell Kelly, Nancy Carroll, Frances Williams, The Dodge Sisters, Paul Ash, Abe Lyman, Horace Heidt and scores of other names. Youngsters showing promise are entered in huge training classes, and are coached until they attain the perfection of veterans Commanding talented stage directors, Fanchon & Marco's studio is in the position of being a college of the stage.

The little revues produced by Fanchon & Marco have always been noted for the youthful enthusiasm of performers and this appealing exuberance is due to the "give the beginner a chance" policy.

It is planned that within the next few months effort will be directed to running the newly acquired studio on a full capacity basis, which will allow doubling of the present producing budget.

STAGE SHOWS

San Antonio Majestic

Week ending April 2

This week's bill is good, clean, wholesome entertainment throughout, and if RKO continues to put on such lengthy programs in the future, the patrons can't kick about not getting their money's worth.

Dave Smason and His R-K-Olians are in the pit and start this peppy vaudeville presentation off with a bang.

Doris Girton and Girls, three women and a man, with the aid of as many bicycles, did some whirlwind feats of daring on one and two wheels. The man and one woman did a few acrobatic turns that drew a good hand.

Rita Burgess Gould held the deuce spot and was accompanied at the ivories by an unbilled gentleman who didn't have anything to say, as Miss Gould said it all. She offered a most pleasing impersonation of the life of a French prima donna from her start to when she arrived in this country, then on to her elderly days. Miss Gould also presented some good, sound advice and philosophy that made the audience pay close attention to what she was telling them. She blended this with a song, "Here Comes the Sun," and she put it over in big style. This was followed by a curtain spiel and she took three bows and received a nice hand from the patrons.

White and Manning were on the trey spot with the Three Bernie Brothers, who did some fancy tap dancing, a military drill with footwork well above par. The girl was clever as a toe stepper while the male did comic antics and later they both got funny. One of the unbilled men in this number possessed a pleasing voice. Two bows and one encore.

Britt Wood, billed as "The Boob and His Harmonica," headlined this well balanced stage show and scored a show-stop with his little French harp. This instrument brought Wood out eight times and he was forced to do several encores before the patrons would let him go. He also did a guitar solo and yodeled for good measure. His hilarious monologue and dance, with other chattering talk, went over in a great way. His songs were "The Chocolate Soldier" and "Under the Double Eagle," the latter on the little mouth organ. Britt is about the best liked comedian and musician to come through here so far, according to the applause and curtain calls that he received.

As an added attraction, The Earle Cobb Kiddies, a dance revue and recital, with about 20 or more children of all ages, presented a series of neat hoofing, songs, tap and toe steps, Russian dances, soft-shoe and struts. These youngsters are all pretty fair for local talent and most of them show real signs of developing into professionals.

Cincinnati Albee

Week ending March 27

With "names" of screen and stage featured, and practically all the acts billed in heavy blackface type, the current bill measures up to the RKO standard.

Alice & Sonny Lamont, two men and two women, announced as a family, occupy the "hello" spot. Sonny, who claims a weight of 268 pounds, and looks it, opens in one with a round of wisecracks, after which the act goes into full stage for some more or less conventional wire work, later returning to one with additional wisecracking, closing with some really clever tumbling by the corpulent Sonny.

Rin-Tin-Tin and his master, Lee Duncan, holds down the deucer. Practically the first half of the act is taken up by a film showing "Rinty" doing many of his unusual stunts. After a short talk by Duncan, the dog is put through his paces, and seems to have lost none of his audience appeal since seen here last season.

"Vaudeville, Please"!

Dayton, O.—Backed by a petition containing 20,000 names of local residents, John F. Ahlers, president of the chamber of commerce, petitioned Joseph Plunkett, head of RKO, to return vaudeville to the Keith here. Beside the Lyric, a burlesque house, which closed several weeks ago, but recently reopened, there is nothing even resembling a stage performance in the city.

Leavitt & Lockwood, aided and abetted by Eddie Cassell, Fred Kuhlman and Vera Dunn, present a tab musical comedy turn. Opening in one, they use four flash back scenes, a living room, a doctor's office, miniature golf course and dance hall to get their comedy effects across, some of which is accomplished with several "dummies." Closing in one, they offer a few songs, some ambitious hoofing and considerable clowning. The act runs unusually long, and the running time could be reduced without detracting from the net result.

Dora Maughan, on next to closing, is heralded as a late star of "Fine and Dandy," Joe Cook's stage play, and is billed as "The Bad, Bad Woman," which impression she tries to convey in her songs and chatter, the former being rendered in a semi-talking style. Although somewhat handicapped by a cold, she had no difficulty in registering with the aid of an unbilled accompanist at the grand. "Can This Be Love?" one of the songs she used in "Fine and Dandy," was especially well received.

Sammy Cohen closes the show. His act is preceded by a movie trailer showing his screen work in "What Price Glory" and "Plastered in Paris." He does considerable wisecracking before introducing his recently-acquired wife, who projects a couple of songs. Cohen also offers a few dance steps and body gyrations, all the while featuring through his action the generous size nose with which nature has endowed him. This becomes rather monotonous.

Providence Fay's

Week ending April 3

Ilse Marvenga, blond songbird of the musical comedy stage, headed the vaudeville program at Fay's this week, presenting a colorful act that scored an instantaneous hit with all classes of patrons. Despite the fact that few in the audience knew of her reputation, Marvenga's personality is so magnetic that she clicked on her merits alone. She wisely uses a romantic theme in her repertoire. With her are two clever dancers, Rita Townsend and William Bold.

A speedy adagio spectacle is second in the spotlight, the Six California dancers headed by Jack Randall. The act is spectacular in the extreme, with pretty girls being hurled through the air into strong masculine arms. This human juggling is done against a pirate setting with picturesque costumes.

The comedy on the bill is provided by Al Tucker and Manny Smith, "Two Gentlemen From Nowhere." Despite the fact that they are gagging all the time, the two put across some real musical numbers that score mightily. The Cyclonic Trio, claiming the roller skating speed record, is a good opening attraction, and a diminutive trapeze artiste, Flo Myo, has a nice little swinging act that takes her high into the wings and over the audience.

Books 8 Vaudeville Acts

Milwaukee—RKO Riverside has booked eight acts of vaudeville, starting this week, to revive the old stage entertainment.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Leon Bloom, director of WBBM studio orchestra, is a wizard at the piano. His complete knowledge of music and composition was gained as a student and later as a concert pianist in the leading cities of Europe. He has directed both symphonic and theatre orchestras in Chicago. His is one of the few studio bands in the country that is a complete symphonic and a full dance orchestra in one. . . . Theo Alban, the Lucky Strike Tenor, had his palm read by Josef Ranald, world famous palmist, this week. Ranald predicted that when Theo finished his Lucky Strike contract next February, he would be engaged for operatic work. . . . Louis Lipstone recently returned from a vacation in sunny California. . . . Duke Ellington returned to the Oriental theatre for a return engagement. . . . Austin Mack and orchestra have replaced Johnny Constantine at White City. . . . Harry Bloom singing his hit song over station WJJD. . . . Ann Cameron doing her part to put over Bernard Granville's programs with her beautiful voice.

Getting up in time to rehearse and broadcast a program heard at 7:30 in the morning may be tough luck for Ford and Wallace, nationally known harmony crooners, but it's good luck for a number of more or less antiquated milk wagon horses posted along the route taken by the two radio entertainers to reach the NBC studios. Antoine "Tony" Wallace and Jackie Ford both hail from the wide open spaces, Miss Wallace from Colorado and Ford from Canada, and neither has forgotten his early love for animals of all descriptions. Believe it or not, each usually carries a pocket full of sugar cubes to give to the milk wagon horses they meet in their early morning dashes to reach the studio in time not to disapoint a large audience of early rising fans. . . . Added to the Blue Book of radio aristocracy is the name of Sing Loo Brown. Sing Loo is the latest addition to the family of Bobby Brown of WBBM. Sing Loo, presented to Bobby by Paul Whiteman, is a Siamese cat, from a long line of ancestors owned by celebrities. . . . Clyde McCoy, with his irresistible personality and his perfect dance orchestra, has become a great favorite of Chicago audiences. Clyde, renowned as a trumpet player, is heard in thrice nightly broadcasts.

Morgan L. Eastman, pioneer Chicago broadcaster and former director and manager of station WENR, has been named assistant to the vice-president of the Chicago division of the NBC. Niles Trammel, vice-president and manager, announced today. His appointment is effective immediately. Eastman is credited with having put the first radio program on the air from Chicago. . . . One of the most envied men in the radio in the eyes of many people is Bill Hay, announcer for Amos 'n' Andy in their nightly episodes. Fans often say they wish they could know what's going to happen like Bill does—but the funny part of it is, Bill doesn't know any more than the radio audience. Just before going on the air Amos 'n' Andy hand him the synopsis of the preceding program, which he reads—but he never sees the manuscript for the program being broadcast. Of course, Correll and Gosden always write every word of their episodes and always have—and no one but themselves has been heard in their broadcasts.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (RKO Flushing, New York City), presented another of his original novelties, "Grab-Bag of Songs," for this week's solo and did very well with it. His usual opening, that of the playing of "Voice of the RKO" was followed by his own inimitable manner of welcoming his audience and was followed by a slide explaining that the huge bag at the side of the console was full of popular songs, and that the audience would have to sing any song that he would pull from it. During all this explaining, Bernie ad libbed with the audience and at the finish of the last slide, pulled out the popular number, "King's Horses." The second song pulled was a specially written version, incorporating well known slogans, and played to the tune, "You're the One I Care For." Next was "For You," then a tongue-twister to "Cheerful Little Earful" (this was a most clever one) and then a final chorus of "Let Me Call You Sweetheart." Cowham has his own distinct manner of playing and presenting his novelties and has proven himself a huge success at this house.

BETTY HAMMOND (Publix Strand, New Orleans) works the old one about "Organ For Sale," and manages to inject enough showmanship in it to make it go. The slides announce the Strand as going into a talkie policy and offers the organ for sale. Betty then walks up to the organ, which bears a "For Sale" sign, and plays another slide saying that if the public will sing, perhaps the organ may be kept and with it her job. The public obliges by singing "Mmm, Mmm, Mmm, Don't You Wanna Take a Walk," after more urging it again obliges with "To Whom It May Concern," followed by "Ninety-nine Out of a Hundred." By this time it seems the Strand management has decided to keep both the organ and Betty, so Miss Hammond tears up the "For Sale" sign and plays "You're Driving Me Crazy." Applause is heavy at this spot.

RALPH (Loew's Paradise, New York City) presented a novel and entertaining songfest called the "Song Show." It consisted of the display of popular songs, each of which was sung well by this audience. Ralph opened the solo with a slide introduction and explanation, mentioning the various industries having shows at this time of the year, and then went into the playing of these numbers: "Here Comes the Sun," "My Ideal," "Walking My Baby Back Home" and a specially written verse incorporating names of various makes of automobiles, played to the tune, "Baby Just Cares," which closed the solo. Ralph played and presented the solo very well, and was amply rewarded by a good response from the audience.

ARLO HULTS (RKO 86th, New York City), this week presents a burlesque novelty on a radio broadcast. It was offered in a spirit of fun and presented in a showmanly manner to which the audience responded by singing lustily and applauding at the close of the solo. Calling this community songfest, "A Radio Broadcast," he opens with a smart comedy announcement to the effect that this is to be a re-broadcast of some favorite radio hours. The songs used were theme songs used by well known artists and hours and consisted of "Truly, I Love You," "You're the One I Care For," "Give Me Something to Remember You By," a special verse to tune "Curse of an Aching Heart" and "Wabash Moon."

Hello Everybody

Paul Ash, who is proving himself a big feature of the New York Paramount shows, is vacationing this week in Atlantic City. Incidentally, people who heard him conduct last week's overture are still talking about it. He and his orchestra did a great job of their program of "Impressions of Aida," "Love for Sale" and "Walkin' My Baby Back Home." The Paramount office has been receiving many favorable comments on Ash.

You have probably heard some of Robert L. Ripley's "Believe It or Not" short subjects for Vitaphone, but have you recognized the music which accompanies them? It is an old song, written by Harry Richman and Agner Silver, called "I Don't Believe It, But Say It Again." "Rip" admits that he has been called a liar more times than any man living, so the music of the song is regarded as suitable for playing with his shorts in spite of the fact that "Rip" has the proof for every statement he makes in his Vitaphone shorts and in his cartoons.

The two alleys leading to the stage door of Loew's Fox Great Lakes theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., have been named "Wesley Eddy Lane" and "Wild Oscar Alley," in honor of the theatre's master of ceremonies and organist, respectively. Did you know that Al Mitchell, well known master of ceremonies, opened Friday, April 10, as featured organist at the Loew's Valencia, Jamaica, Long Island? Miss Edith Schoenfeld has been assigned as featured organist at Fox's Academy of Music and will feature song slides shortly. Lou Forbes, leader of the Saenger Grand Orchestra, New Orleans, will hereafter direct both the orchestra and stageband, succeeding Eddie O'Rourke, m. c. Lou will also act as master of ceremonies.

With Bobby Crawford at the helm, things are running smoothly at the DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, Inc., song factory. Though younger in years than many of his competitors in the field, Bobby has about the longest string of song hits to his credit of any of the others. Dropped in to see George Piantidosi, general manager for Phil Kornheiser, Inc., and George says things look great for "Dreaming of My Indiana Sweetheart," "Stories" and the new Al Piantidosi novelty song, "There Goes a Horse." Abe Oleman, president of Oleman Music, is justly enthusiastic over "Whispering" and "I Found What I Wanted in You," the firm's leading songs. The entire force at Santly Brothers, Inc., celebrated the firm's second anniversary at the Hollywood Restaurant last Saturday. Congratulations and all best wishes for many more anniversaries, Santly Brothers. It is rumored that little Jackie Kaderly, half of the organ team of Jackie & Jean, who played at the Paramount, Denver, has recently been married. Nothing definite on it, but Eloise (Jean) Rowan is now featured alone at the Denver theatre, Denver, and Stuart Barrie is featured at the Paramount. Eddie Schwartz, organist, played at the Regent, Bronx, for the past week. Hope you're enjoying the beautiful (?) spring weather we've been having lately. S'long.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The last week of Lent brought a very noticeable drop in theatre grosses, especially in the New England states. In the houses in this section of the country new low grosses were established for the last 12 months. At no time in recent months have so many changes been noted in any one seven day period. Despite new lows during the last week of Lent, the 40 day period as a whole held up remarkably well, with exhibitors throughout the country finding business almost at normal and with less depression than during the same period last year.

Writers Preparing Bill of Rights elected) was a blacksmith. At each manuscript he would roll up his sleeves, set his jaw and say: "Now, boys, let's get to work and lick this damn thing into shape." He licked it. But after the garbled mess was out in galley form every self-respecting author refused to let his name appear at the head of it.

If any able writer is to work successfully under another man he must look up to that individual as one who knows more about his trade than he does. And, it would appear, the studios have a lot to learn about the writing trade.

There's a new boy actor in Hollywood.

The silents gave us Jackie Coogan; the talkers have delivered Jackie Cooper. And just as soon as "Skippy" is broadly released the people of every town in the country are going to put a new halo about the head of this tousie-haired, lovable youngster whose every grimace, action, speech epitomizes the genus boy. He is so delightfully unselfconscious, so deeply genuine, that, as one observer said, no director in all Hollywood could spoil his acting. Let us hope no one else will.

Of most trade interest, however, at the moment is the box office career of "Skippy," in which young Cooper shines. The production industry, we feel, will regard this different kind of picture as an important index to the present public taste.

"Skippy" comes along like a fresh, sparkling draught amidst the heavy fare of the present theatre banquet table.

Socalled sophisticated pictures, in which our old and cherished institution of marriage is kicked all over the lot like a practice football, abound to a degree of confusion. It has become exceedingly difficult to remember all the titles, which seem to have exhausted every possible description of the various degrees and species of unfaithfulness. In passing we would like to point out to the writers and producers that there is a difference between sophistry and sophistication. Most of the labelled pictures of sophistication we see deal in such farfetched sophistries that tragedy skates on the thin ice of the ridiculous.

Then there are the gangster pictures, of which there is yet no end in sight.

It is said, in behalf of both types of picture, that they reflect, as pictures must, the facts and the spirit of the times. Certainly they reflect the front pages of our best newspapers. Some of the states are apparently in a neck and neck race to pass quick and easy divorce laws. And racketeering is calling, over the heads of helpless municipalities, for Federal control.

There are some heavy considerations, however, for picture people to weigh carefully.

One is the responsibility, of which this industry is well and most actively aware, namely, that pictures must guide as well as entertain their great mass audience.

The other is the ever practical industrial problem of giving the public what they will cheerfully pay for.

We note the recent purchase of a gangster story in which not a gun is used. That, while possibly disappointing to the sound engineers, is certainly a novelty. But producers know well enough that novelty cannot last for long in such a succession of one-theme pictures. And they know equally well that sameness is always a wet blanket on the box office.

People like red blooded fiction, pictures with gusto in story and acting. "Front Page" is topical proof of that fact and "Dirigible" will add further affirmation. But we cannot hope to, nor do we want to, shock people all the time. When the shocks are overdone they are going to sound very hollow. And it is to be remembered that a little picture called "Caught Short" still holds the record gross at a studio where the year's product includes many pretentious pictures and equally pretentious themes, stars, and cost figures. It made people laugh.

People do enjoy the basic emotions of laughter and tears. Somehow, we feel that a cycle of normalcy and simplicity is just over the horizon, and that pictures like "Skippy" will beckon it to hurry along.

Music as the Narrator

By JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

character of the music; perhaps it is due more to the naiveness of the principal characters and the fateful prescience that weaves through the drama. But certainly the fluency of the melody, the apt recurrence of the principal motifs and the tragic inevitableness of it all, leaves one in the same mood as that induced by the great work of Puccini.

The score is never a literal interpretation of dramatic or pictorial effects, except where such literalness is imperative. Here are some instances in point: In the very beginning there is a scene of a man blowing on a huge shell-horn. The sound is, of course, authentically imitated here. It is a summons for the islanders to barge out and meet an incoming ship. Shortly after this scene we see a man calling several times. Instead of hearing a human voice the same horn effect is used, synchronized with the movement of his lips. A little later a young girl is shown calling, and the sound of her voice is interpreted by a muted trumpet. This is musical interpretation—not literal imitation.

Another instance of effect: toward the latter half of the picture there is shown a gendarme who accepts a large pearl from the simple-hearted lover of the girl who is "Tabu." It is offered as a bribe to save the girl from being brought back to the island. The gendarme accepts the bribe (worth many hundred times the reward he would get for making the arrest) and laughs—ironically—several times. Each time the woodwinds in the orchestra imitate—while interpreting—his cacchination. These are isolated touches to show the artistry of the score.

The thematic material is handled with an authoritative appreciation of dramatic values. That accorded the old chief is forceful, domineering, inexorable, and deeply tinctured with superstitious mystery. When in the moonlight his shadow is thrown athwart the sleeping lovers—and the girl awakes in terror—the sinister power of the music is awesome. The recurrence of this and other leading themes is done in a manner that reflects the coherence of Mr. Riesenfeld's score.

One of the most apt and appealing touches is where the old chieftain, having discovered the hiding place of the lovers, wings a dart with a message of warning to the girl that unless she returns to the island, she will be sacrificed to their gods. At the moment the girl picks up the message, the opening bars of Schubert's fateful "Death and the Maiden" are announced in the orchestra. The girl rushes over to the old chief, throws herself at his feet and pleads for mercy. Here an exquisitely plaintive Nocturne by Chopin is played, and the effect is poignantly pathetic. The girl goes with the old chieftain to the boat that will carry her back to Bora Bora, leaving a note to her lover—a farewell. When he finds the note, there is an effect in the music that sounds like the cry of some stricken animal—a discordant, high-pitched blast from the brass section terrifying in its tonal expression of anguish of spirit and blasted hopes. He rushes after her—sees the boat far out at sea—and plunges into the water in frantic pursuit. He reaches the boat utterly spent, catches hold of a trailing rope—and is about to pull himself into the boat, when the old chief cuts the rope, and the wretched lover finally succumbs to the sea.

Here in this last dramatic scene the action is intensified by the character and tempo of the music, a marche funebre that builds up to a powerful climax, to die away—diminuendo e ritardando—as the youth, frustrated, trails behind the boat that carries his loved one away, and sinks below the waves.

The musical score of "Tabu" was recorded through the Meyer Synchronizing Service at the Tec-Art Studios in Hollywood. The sound effects and recording were under the supervision of Abe Meyer.

correct or a picture will fail, no matter what the director or the cast may do.

They are against the practice of several writers rewriting and rehashing one another's work until a point is reached where so many minds and so many points of view have been applied to a given script that its original thematic entity has been entirely lost and it becomes an innocuous thing. They believe, further, that if a producer rejects their work it should be the property of the writer, and not a thing to be parceled out among other writers for doctoring or revision.

Among the writers who spoke at the meeting were Alfred Cohn, the chairman; Elmer Rice, Herman Mankiewitz, Benjamin Glazer, Waldemar Young, William Slavens McNutt, Frank Woods, Bartlett Cormack, Ernest Vadja, James Seymour, Grover Jones, Clara Beranger, Samuel Raphaelson and Sidney Lazarus.

INDEPENDENTS SPEED PRODUCTION

(Editor's Note: We're sorry that we have to keep apologizing for Krasna, but this time it's really necessary. He was riding down Hollywood boulevard in his Austin last week and one of the manhole covers was off, and down he went, Austin and all. He fell on his head, and while it didn't seem that he was hurt when he was brushed off, he is acting very strangely. He doesn't remember anything of the last two or three years. We took him to a doctor who says it's a very usual case. Krasna wrote the following piece under this condition, thinking it was 1928):

HOLLYWOOD

Mr. Jay Shreck,
Exhibitors Herald-World,
407 South Dearborn St.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Jay:

There's a lot of things I want to talk over with you today, Jay. There's a rumor around here about a company putting out pictures that'll have talk in them, just as if they were on a real stage. I told you this town was getting crazier all the time. I didn't even send it in as a news story, Jay, because what's the use of us printing such foolish stuff, hey? It's called Vitingphone, or something.

Jay, I got the biggest laugh for you you ever had. Remember this Hughes fellow who began that "Hell's Angels" pictures four months ago? Well, it isn't finished yet. Can you beat that? Four months and it isn't finished. I'm betting Doug Hodges it'll take three weeks yet.

From the looks of things I can safely prophesy, Jay, that Colleen Moore will remain on top of the heap for about another five years. Easy that, maybe 10. Maybe it's time we printed another story about what the industry ought to do. We haven't done that for two issues now. I got a few ideas. There's no doubt that the coming pictures will be singing ones. In a few years all you're going to see will be musical films, Jay. No one'll ever get tired of them, no sir. A smart picture company ought to buy up all the songwriters for 10 or 15 years.

Oh, yes, Jay, here's something interesting. A fellow left the Coast recently in a little one-motored airplane to fly to New York. He claims he's going to fly the Atlantic ocean. Imagine, Jay, a nervy guy like that in a little plane, while Byrd and Chamberlain are already in New York, just waiting for the right weather. You know what I think? That guy's just wild to get into the movie game, and if he flies the ocean he'll want to get into pictures as a leading man. I know the type, Jay; you can't fool me. His name's Charles Lingfield, I think.

Those Two Black Crows are certainly going over big. That was a smart idea, all right, having two fellows in blackface. But that's the end of it, Jay, the novelty is gone. There'll never be another blackface colored team popular again in 50 years. Maybe we ought to run an article about it.

Paramount is pushing some kid called Clara Bow. She's all right, Jay, but she'll never be popular. Too quiet, too subdued, if you know what I mean.

I don't care what people say, Jay. I tell you vaudeville is coming back. Give it a little time, that's all. I read some place that the star system is through. That's right, Jay, it is. By 1931 there won't be a box-office name in the industry. People are through with that sort of hokum. They want stories, actors, not just one big star. Believe me, in 1931 you won't know there ever were such people like Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and George Arliss—no, sir. They're through. I can tell, Jay; you know me.

I feel sort of funny in my head, Jay. I think I'm going to lie down a while. Write you next week.

Sincerely,

NORMAN KRASNA

Two Studios Setting Mark With Spring Output

Volume of Shorts and Score of Features in Work at Tec-Art And Metropolitan

By EDWARD CHURCHILL

Hollywood (QP)—Increased activity among independent producers is noted, with the coming of spring. A volume of shorts and almost a score of feature length pictures are either being prepared or shot at the present time at Tec-Art and Metropolitan Sound Studios alone.

A survey at Tec-Art reveals that Chesterfield Productions is shooting "The Inside Story," with Vera Reynolds and Carol Nye. Hollywood Syndicate is making "Masters of Steel" with Nick Stuart. Charles Hutchinson is busy with "Midnight." Shorts include Mickey Mouse, Vagabond Adventure Series, Voice of Hollywood, Reed Productions, "Detective Shorts," and "Beauty Secrets of Hollywood," of Welshay Pictures, Inc.

Christie has "Meet the Wife" ready for Columbia release at Metropolitan Sound Studios. Al Rogell is preparing "Gangster Girl." Liberty Productions is getting ready another May Robson vehicle and soon will release "The Mad Parade." Harold Lloyd also is preparing his next. Four companies are producing shorts.

Tiffany is back at work with a Ken Maynard and a Chimp comedy. Sennett is making a comedy every two weeks. Hal Roach is taking the annual spring rest, but Larry Darmour is doing both features and shorts. Cruze is cutting "Salvation Nell."

Paramount May Build New Stage at Eastern Studio

Construction of one or possibly two new sound stages in a building bought by Paramount a year ago adjoining the Eastern studio in Long Island, for which plans have already been drawn, awaits approval of the home office executives.

Plans call for a tunnel to connect present studio with the new property, which is across the street. The new stages will not affect the present season's schedule of 17 features. First of a new shorts schedule in the East, calling for three reels per week, went into production this week.

Barsky to Make 6 Features

Bud Barsky, producer of the Chimp comedies released by Tiffany, will produce six feature productions for the independent market. With two more Chimp comedies to come, Barsky will have completed his contract with Tiffany, and it is stated he is looking for another national distributor.

Asks Cheaper Multi-Linguals To Save Foreign Film Trade

Hollywood—Roy J. Pomeroy, director and technical expert, who predicted correctly the method of making multi-linguals would be abandoned as unprofitable, believes this country may lose out in the foreign market unless cheaper multi-linguals are made.

Foreign versions are a technical problem, according to Pomeroy, and should be left to that branch of the industry.

STAR-GAZER

HARD LUCK

There was news in the fact that "Dirigible," Columbia's special, opened at Grauman's Chinese theatre April 7 with a great deal of fanfare and hullaballoo, but there was a human interest story behind the opening which probably won't be told. This story concerns the hard luck and the good luck of one Lieutenant-Commander Frank W. Wead, one of the first naval air pilots, wartime flier, writer, and ex-invalid.

Wead flew all kinds of airplanes with amazing luck. He flew them all kinds of ways. He cracked up with amazing frequency. The Navy wore out wreck sirens and ambulances for no good reason, for Mr. Wead—I should say Pilot Wead—always came up smiling. His flying ability was the toast of the San Diego air base and his ability to get out of all kinds of air scrapes was the subject of frequent comment.

That was good luck.

Then, one day, he slipped and fell off the bottom step of a whole flight of steps and broke his back.

Nothing could have been worse luck.

But, in spite of his injury, which placed him on his back for months, he refused to give up fighting. He swore that they couldn't down Pilot Wead, and that was that.

Reading and writing were his only diversions.

AUTHOR

He started penning fiction, and sold several stories to pulpwood adventure magazines.

At about this time—the spring of 1928—a certain writer from M-G-M went to the naval air base in quest of data to be used in connection with that highly successful air picture, "The Flying Fleet."

"Go over to the hospital and see Wead," was the advice given him on all sides.

He went. He talked with Wead and recognized a "motion picture mind" at the outset.

He dashed back to Culver City, and begged Irving Thalberg to hire Wead as technical adviser.

"Not a chance," said Thalberg at first.

"But you don't want the public picking flaws in your story," the writer urged. "You want it technically correct if it's to be a good picture."

Thalberg finally was won over.

The writer returned to San Diego and broke the news to Wead. On crutches, Wead came to Los Angeles. He has been here ever since.

He went on the M-G-M payroll at $200 a week. Now, he gets several times this sum for his work. Whenever a bang-up naval, aviation or sea picture shows up, it's a pretty good bet that Lieutenant-Commander Frank W. Wead had a hand in it.

His latest is "Dirigible." It has been heralded by critics as an exceptionally fine and a very unusual picture.

"The Flying Fleet" was called one of the best of the air pictures. "Shipmates," a naval story without airplanes, starring Robert Montgomery, also is partly his work.

IMPROVING

Wead's physical condition is constantly improving. He's having a lot of fun. So, we have not only an interesting story about an interesting man but a lesson in the old "Never Say Die" philosophy.

The opening of "Dirigible" at the Chinese theatre was a tribute not only to Columbia Pictures, to Harry Cohn, to Frank Capra, the director, and to the players, but to Lieutenant-Commander Wead.

In closing, an interesting item about the picture. It was shot so painstakingly and worked on with such thoroughness, that when it was finished it was 125,000 feet long. Many previews were necessary to get it down to program length. On the first run, the showing consumed an entire day and studio executives were given time out for luncheon and supper.

WHEN THE SCREEN TEACHES

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

FOR the past two years there has been a growing consciousness among educators everywhere of the important relationship of the sound screen to the class room. Visual education has sprung to the foreground in pedagogic discussions.

Detailed and expensive surveys in this field have been carried on by the Universities of California, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Kansas. Yale and Harvard have made it a matter for intensive investigation. Columbia has adopted visual instruction in her courses; and the Horace Mann School of New York has established a successful schedule of screen lessons for its pupils.

Within the past year, Electrical Research Products has created a new educational department for the production of short films designed to meet the demands of the public school curriculum, while other large producing companies have engaged a staff of experts to study the requirements and the equipment of schools.

But in all of this brilliant, intellectual analyzing, one phase of the sound screen in its relationship to children has not been emphasized. Educators generally have been inclined to frown upon the entertainment screen as something of a menace rather than an aid for pupils. The invaluable correlation of the best in current pictures with class room work has been almost entirely overlooked.

In the current season several remarkable pictures have come to the screen with an additional number, at this time, on the brink of release. Some of these are of particular significance to educators and to children, yet, their educational opportunities are passed almost unnoted by the schools of the country. For example, "With Byrd at the South Pole" and "Abraham Lincoln" have come, and gone.

The thrilling film record of the discovery of the South Pole is a saga of courage and high adventure, of scientific preparedness and incredible determination. It is a visual experience in Georgraphy, History, Natural History, Science—and Heroism. "Lincoln" is an equally important document. It is a superb re-creation of a great president during the vital days of the Civil War; a living picture of the strong men who surrounded him and wrote undying pages in our history. Every school child in this country should have been encouraged to see "Lincoln" if not actually required by his teachers to do so. And he should have gone equipped with a prepared questionnaire to help him pick out and remember the play's important factors. This would have created an opportunity for lively class room discussion on Sheridan, Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Grant; the political temper of the states; the conditions under which the armies of the North and the South swung into battle; the battles of Fort Sumpter and the bitter losses of Bull Run. And behind all of this great drama, a suffering President, "Lincoln, the Man."

These two supreme accomplishments of the screen passed without the applause or the encouragement of the schools. They faltered at the box office for lack of public interest. If a few courageous teachers with imagination and vision did bring these pictures into their classroom discussion, they did so in humble obscurity. There was no general, organized movement to make use of a priceless educational and patriotic opportunity.

Fast on the heels of these we have several outstanding current offerings such as "Cimarron," "Trader Horn," "Rango," "The Painted Desert," "The Great Meadow" and "Fighting Caravans," with the new epic of the air, "Dirigible", adding its quota to this imposing group. What will the schools do about them? Their pupils, who are the regular patrons of the neighborhood theatres may, accidentally, see one or two of them. For it is largely a matter of chance with children. Titles mean very little to them. They are not readers of the professional critics' columns. They not infrequently flip a coin to determine which of the three pictures within walking distance they will go to see. Heads, or tails? The choice may bring them to a filmed story of divorce; of illicit love; of gangster heroics; or a comedy of vulgarities. Then we hear the loud protests of the righteous decrying the menace of the movies to the youth of the country. It is so easy—and sensational to denounce: and so much more effort to marshall groups of eager youngsters into the theatre where the finer film is showing.

What are our educators going to do about it? Are they going to continue to shy away from anything that looks like free advertising, or the making use of a school for a commercial advantage? Or, are they going to face the situation courageously, and fairly, knowing that their active cooperation for the best pictures will accomplish three valuable results: it will shunt their pupils into the theatres where the better pictures are playing, thereby keeping them away from the worst; it will bring new vitality and discussion into the class-room; and it will encourage the production of higher type pictures.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD believes that the time has come when a national campaign for the helpful coordination of school and screen will be important in results. Toward this end, this new department will select the month's outstanding pictures. It will print brief, authoritative resumes for teachers. This school service will include helpful questionnaires for free distribution in the schools, which the children, after they have seen a recommended picture, should be able to answer intelligently.

This work offers a constructive activity for Better Films Committees, Parent-Teacher groups and women's clubs whose influence will be of enormous value to a national building up of prestige for better pictures.

"Cimarron"

An RKO Feature

Stars: Richard Dix and Irene Dunne

"Cimarron" is a story of the rise of Oklahoma from the historic days of her land grants to the present period of her national wealth and influence. The film is made from the novel by Edna Ferber. It is the romance of Yancy Cravatt, pioneer, wanderer, sharp shooter and husband of Sabra Venable, who has been reared within the walls of Southern aristoeracy. The Cravatts pioneer westward. Their covered wagon brings them to the frontier town of Osage, Okla. Yancy, as editor, and the most colorful figure of Osage, loves his wife and their two children. He helps to manage the affairs of the town and prints fearlessly the news that is fit to print. But he is a born adventurer who finds it irksome to have to remain more than five years in any one place. He leaves his family to follow in the wake of new land grants. He is heard of in the Spanish American War; then in the Great World War; and then, back again on the teeming oil fields of Oklahoma.

The questionnaires published herewith are designed for free distribution in the schools, with the suggestion that the pupils be encouraged to answer the questions after they have seen the recommended pictures.

"Rango"

A Paramount Picture

Characters: Ben Ali, old hunter; Bin, his son, and "Rango," young ourang-outang

"Rango" is an adventure picture, planned, directed and photographed by Ernest G. Shoedsack, who also brought to the screen "Grass" and "Chang." "Rango" is the best of the three pictures. Its locale is in the ferny tangled jungles of Sumatra where the beasts of prey and the chattering monkeys fill the night and day with their eerie sounds. The word "Rango" is taken from the word orang-outang and is the abbreviation used by the small native boy of the picture. This film has a rare quality of pictorial beauty. It tells the story of simple natives wrenching their sustenance from the wilderness. Its monkeys are almost human and furnish the comedy, the interest and the drama of the jungle.

1. What does the word "Rango" mean?
2. Where is Sumatra? Locate it on your maps.
3. In what zone is Sumatra?
4. In what kind of country is the picture taken?
5. What is a jungle?
6. Describe the foliage of the jungle.
7. What sounds did you hear in the picture?
8. Were they different at night?
9. Why did the natives build their hut on stilts?
10. What kind of animal was their beast of burden?
11. How did they protect their chickens and beast of burden at night?
12. How did the old hunter protect himself at night from the wild creatures of the jungle? (By fire)?
13. Describe the traps they built for tigers.
14. Were the monkeys afraid of the tigers?
15. What did they do when they heard the tigers roar?
16. Were the mother monkeys careful of their young?
17. How many animals did you see in this picture?
18. What was the most exciting moment?
19. What part of the picture did you think was the most beautiful?
    (Ans. Dawn over the jungle. A magnificent lifting crescendo of light and sound).
20. What part of the picture did you like best?

Write a 250 word composition on:
"The Jungles of Sumatra."

"The Painted Desert"

An RKO-Pathe Picture

Stars: Bill Boyd, Helen Twelvetrees, William Farnum

"The Painted Desert" is another Western but has more of pictorial beauty and geological interest than the average. It tells the story of two men of the desert who find a laughing baby boy in a deserted covered wagon. They disagree over who shall possess him and separate bitter enemies. The foster father of the boy raises him tenderly to stalwart young manhood. His embittered partner, in the meanwhile, has married and has been left with a winsome daughter. This situation develops an interesting plot in which there is a good deal of philosophy and heart-interest. The desert in the picture extends to the serrated rim of a magnificent cannon where the beauty of extraordinary rock formation is a lesson in itself.

1. Where is the Painted Desert?
2. How often do water-holes occur in the desert?
3. How long can herds of steer travel without water?
4. Describe the stampede of the steers to the water-hole.
5. What is a cañon?
6. What causes its strange rock formation?
7. Describe the odd stone shapes on the desert itself.
8. What is the cause of these strange formations?
9. Where is tungsten ore generally found in the United States?
10. What commercial uses are made of it?
11. How is it mined?
12. Describe the mine in the Painted Desert.
13. Describe the dynamite explosion in the mine.
14. Does the Government restrict the destruction of the land by planned explosions such as this?
15. What did you consider the most exciting moment in this picture?

Write a composition of 250 words on:
"Strange Rocks and Stones That I Have Found."

To the Exhibitor

Through "School and Screen" the exhibitors of the country are offered a program of active cooperation between educational institutions and the theatre, a program which will be beneficial to the exhibitor playing pictures of significance to the classroom. Principals and teachers in cities and towns of the nation will receive this publication's better pictures service.

This new department will publish synopses for the teachers' information and questionnaires for the pupils on the outstanding picture or pictures. The purpose of this department is to encourage the helpful coordination of school and screen and to offer a program of constructive activity for Better for Better Films Committees, Parent-Teacher groups and various women's clubs.

"Trader Horn"

A Metro Goldwyn Mayer Picture

Stars: Harry Carey, Edwina Booth, Duncan Rinaldo

"Trader Horn" is a triumph of photographic achievement in the jungle. Wild animals roam before the camera with native naturalness: gazelles, wild dogs, giraffes, hyenas and jackals, black panthers and leopards; zebras and horned rhinocieri, boa constrictors and slanting, gleaming crocodiles. The film follows the thread of the book by Ethelreda Lewis which focused the attention of the world on the strange old man whose colorful yarns of interior Africa he retold for her benefit. The Trader is accompanied by his young companion, Peru, in their quest for the fair haired daughter of a missionary who was supposed to be living as a sort of "white goddess" with a fierce cannibal tribe above the Murchison Falls district "where no white man has trod."

1. Locate on the map the trip taken by Trader Horn.
2. Through what part of Africa did this trip take the adventurers?
3. In what type of boat did they travel?
4. What articles did Trader Horn buy from the natives?
5. What did he pay them for his purchases?
6. Who were his guides on these dangerous trips?
7. What kind of place did they select for their first night's camp?
8. What creatures infested the place?
9. What frightening sound did they hear throughout the day and night?
10. Locate the Murchison Falls District on the map.
11. What kind of country did they find above the falls?
12. Why did so many animals congregate in this section?
13. How many kinds of animals can you name from the picture? (This is an excellent memory test. One group of children listed thirty-five.)
14. Which were the most savage of the beasts?
15. How many kinds of birds can you recall from the picture?
16. Describe the native village.
17. What were the names of two of the tribes?
18. What is a pygmie?
19. Describe the pygmie village.
20. What was the most exciting moment of the picture?

Write a 250 word composition on:
"Wild Life in the Jungle."

"Berlin"

A Fox Feature Picture

"Berlin, the Symphony of a Big City," is a skillful and imaginatively woven picture of a city . . . its heart and its soul; its achievements, its efforts and its gaieties. "Berlin" is an effective and beautiful travelogue in flowing, story style. It opens with a train speeding into the German Capital, and then proceeds to show without caption, or story, a day in the city's existence. The Capital arises, shutters are thrown open, and the machinery of a working day set in motion. The children walk out to school; men labor through the morning, they lunch for an hour and return to their work. At twilight, they set their faces toward home in anticipation of dinner and amusement in the evening.

This is the scenario of the picture. Magnificent photography and fine imaginative incidental bits give actual dramatic power. The picture is synchronized with an excellent musical score written for it by Dr. Edmund Meisal. It was conceived by Karl Mayer and Karl Freund, and was directed, brilliantly, by Walther Ruttman.

"Berlin" is a tone poem of a city.

1. Where is Berlin?
2. Compare the population of Berlin with London, Paris, New York and Chicago.
3. How long a period of time does the picture cover?
4. What is the first sign of life in the city in the morning?
5. Describe the various street cars in Berlin.
6. Has the city a subway?
7. Describe the crowds going to work.
8. How many kinds of workmen did you notice?
9. Compare the traffic to the traffic in your city, or town.
10. What did the crowds do at lunch time?
11. Name ten commercial products manufactured in Berlin.
12. How was the mail delivered?
13. What activities of the city police did you notice?
14. Describe the people's afternoon amusements?
15. How many animals do you remember seeing in the zoo?
16. Describe the crowds coming home from work.
17. How did these people spend their evenings?
18. Are the Germans lovers of music? Why do you think so?
19. Are they a sociable people?
20. Describe the end of a city's day.

Write a 250 word composition on:
"A Day in Berlin."

To the Teacher

MOTION PICTURE HERALD, after a careful study, has launched the department, "School and Screen," with the thought of encouraging children to see the better motion pictures, pictures which may be correlated in an important and interesting way with with classroom work in the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades and first and second years in high school.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Children vs. "Adults Only"

HAVING BEEN AN EXHIBITOR FOR nearly 20 years, and with three years close contact with exhibitors as secretary and treasurer of their organization in North Carolina, I would like to say just a few words which will no doubt bring much condemnation, but which are true, nevertheless.

There is much talk through your valuable paper, as well as other trade papers generally, to the effect that we should appeal to the children in the presentation of pictures on the screens of the country. I believe that if you will check up you will find that only about 5 per cent, and, in many instances, only about 3 per cent of the show-going public, are children. There is nothing finer than to present a motion picture and have hundreds of laughing little folks come and enjoy it, and listen to their laughter, watch their childish faces as they devour the right kind of pictures, and what a joy when you know they are really enjoying the film, and to stand on the door as they exit and hear their comments.

Then, there is the hue and cry now going up all 'round from every direction that the "Adult Only" signs in front of theatres hurt the child business, and greatly hamper the box-office from that angle.

This is true in many instances, but I am firm in my belief that, regardless of what producers and exchanges say today, there is fully 25 per cent of the motion picture—and it might run as high as 35 per cent—that should not be shown in any theatre without the sign, "Adults Only," being prominently displayed. Motion pictures today are so much finer, so much more enjoyable than they were just a few short years ago that there is no comparison, but why all the cry about appealing to children, when such a great percentage of films are being shown that have no appeal to a child, and that they should not see? We realize that some theatres take advantage of certain subjects and display "Adults Only" signs when there is nothing to warrant it.

I now own a film that in many places shows to "Adults Only" but could be shown to children, providing their parents came and explained it properly, but due to the fact that it has no especial appeal for them, I urge the "Adults Only" sign displayed, and the same thing should be done on many of our present day crop of feature pictures.

There is not an exhibitor in the country who desires clean films more than I, and there is no one who would take more delight in completely discarding the "Adults Only" sign, but until present conditions change in our industry it will be much better to polish up the "Adults Only" signs and use them freely. Otherwise we are in for Government regulation and censorship, which is something that we do not need, and should not have, for we have brains enough and are clean minded enough to clean our own house and keep it clean.—"Nat" L. Royster, Readsville Amusement Company, Charlotte, N. C.

Misses the Reports

WE AGREE WITH A NUMBER OF your readers who have written in to express their appreciation of the new release chart. The chart is good. But what we miss more than anything else is the comment of exhibitors on pictures. True, we have never contributed much to the success of that department in your splendid magazine, but we excuse ourselves on the ground that the little burgs cannot play pictures until after everybody else has played them, and therefore anything we might say about a picture has already been said by many others. We appreciate your reviews of pictures, but we think a lot more of the opinion of an exhibitor concerning a picture than we do of the opinion of a professional reviewer.

We are enclosing an editorial from the Arkansas Democrat on pictures that we think deserves to be called to the attention of Mr. Hays, and we are sending same to you with the suggestion that it be published in your paper, if you think it worth the space. The Arkansas Democrat is one of the leading daily papers of our state.—Royal Theatre, Newark, Ark.

P. S. Here is the Editorial:

"Good News From Brother Hays

"Will Hays, generalissimo of morals of the motion pictures, says the tide of public opinion is shifting rapidly from rawness to romance and a new era of entertainment progress is opening up for the industry.

"'The greatest of all censors—the American public—is beginning to vote thumbs down on the 'hard boiled' realism in literature and on the stage which marked the post-war period,' Will informs us."

"His declaration, he says, was inspired by the 'wide public acclaim' which greeted feature pictures in 1930 dealing with great biographical subjects, with themes of prison and civic reform and with stirring epochs of American history.

"Well, Brother Hays' pronouncement may show signs of the elastic imagination of the publicity man, but it 'reads good' just the same. A lot of evils have been blamed on the post-war psychology not the least of which has been the morbid crime story, the smutty so-called sex pictures and other such offerings.

"Just how many people make up this 'American public' we do not know. But we do know that no inconsiderable number of folk spend their evenings in diversions other than attending the movies, and talkies, because they resent the moral tone of the majority of the pictures.

"The number may be few, but there still inhabit the cities of the land Americans who can see no reason for dragging smutty incidents into stories which need no such 'allurements' to make them popular success. It is not prudish to believe that nothing is gained by parading disgusting characters across a movie screen. One does not deserve the scorn of so-called liberal-minded folk merely because one turns thumbs down on movie themes which shock decent-minded folk.

"Will Hays is right. All of the glamour of romance remains. Let us get back to it."

Popinjays' Promenade

Louisville—Somewhere among fans of the country is a man who objects to uniforms on theatre attendants. He wrote to the Courier Journal, and said theatre attaches should be dressed in "civies" of good taste, because "there may be seen in uniforms bellhops, policemen, firemen, elevator starters, conductors, ushers, admirals and generals, all of which is not exactly restful to the eye." The letter is concluded with this parting shot: "An uncommon and pleasing place of entertainment would be that where the promenade of the popinjays is omitted."

British Studio Chief to Report U. S. Film Status

London (QP Cable)—J. A. Thorpe, studio chief of British International, will sail April 11, on the Berengaria for New York, and from there he will go to Hollywood.

It is denied by British International that the trip represents Thorpe's resignation. He is going to America, it is stated, to get information concerning general conditions in the film trade in that country and will report them to his company.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

SLANTS ON A "BIG" INDUSTRY!

"CONGRATULATIONS are in order, Chick," wrote a rising young chap in a large circuit publicity department, "I've just been promoted to director of publicity." So we congratulated him.

And did he get the substantial salary increase which should go with such a promotion? He did not. So from his optimistic viewpoint opportunity was knocking at his door; while from a practical slant we could only see his promotion as a move to save a few dollars by the circuit.

"Hollow honors" is the title of that incident, and there are hundreds of others just like it. So we are wondering whether the boss who made that "master" move would allow himself to be promoted to a bigger job without asking for the salary increase which goes with important promotions.

Those field representatives whose duties consist of watching the theatre overhead might think this one over when tackling the lighting cost problem: Douse all the lights as per the usual method when closing the house for the night and then take a flashlight and go down to the meter room and see if any of those meters are still running.

If they show any signs of activity then it's high time to investigate and find out where some juice is being used all night long. 'Sfact, we tried it on four managers and three of them discovered lights burning where they least expected to find them, such as boiler rooms, organ loft, hanging ceilings, fan houses and projection booths.

One house even discovered a blower fan with a two-horsepower motor going full blast. So this experiment is worth while occasionally.

* * * *

A certain manager met his division chief at the home office and was told that they wanted him (the manager) to know how well-pleased they were with the results he was getting at what was once a "cluck" house. Naturally, the man was elated and felt that his hard work was not ignored.

Imagine his surprise when he reached the theatre to find a new man at his desk with the glad tidings that he was instructed to take over the house.

So back to the home office went the now dejected manager to ask "Why?" And he was told, 'midst apologies, that due to the sale of some of the circuit's houses, it was necessary to place the boys who were without theatres.

But, "Don't worry," he was told, "we'll take care of you." "Report to the B . . . Theatre tomorrow morning and see if you can't help Manager X. . . . put that house over. Of course, you'll have to take a little cut, but as soon as things adjust themselves we'll see that you get a house again."

Pardon, did we call this a business . . . ?

* * * *

For the benefit of some perpetual knockers, we'd like to say that one of the major circuits demonstrated they had hearts when they carried several men without assignments for quite a few weeks at full salary. This particular circuit had been the target for a lot of unfair criticism and if the truth were known it would surprise a lot of boys to know how fair the outfit really is.

And the man responsible for the hiring (and very often the firing) is one executive who will see that a deserving manager gets in line for promotion with a salary increase.

Other large and small chains would do well to add a touch of humane treatment in their contact with the boys running the houses and we are certain that the results would prove it more than worth while.

Oh well, if I can't break a hundred this spring, I'm going to throw my clubs in the lake and take up ping-pong.

Your Cooling Plant!

It has lain idle all winter. Now is the time for you to get busy and see that it is thoroughly gone over in preparation for the hot months ahead. Don't wait until the summer rolls around before you decide to oil up the machinery. There's some pretty delicate parts in those unwieldy appearing machines that can more than likely pick up their full quota of dirt.

Better still, since you can never tell when an emergency will arise, become acquainted with its workings yourself. And after you've got the thing whipped into shape and ready for operation, don't forget to let your patrons know that you have a cooling plant. Inform them by your house organ, by trailer, by heralds or cards in your mailing list that they are going to enjoy a cool and comfortable show at your house. If possible it would be well for you to make up a herald to show them how the plant functions and also explain its benefits. Don't forget, it's the attention you pay now to the things of the future that will ultimately benefit your house and you.

Right?

Here Are Two Types Of Ads Used By Gill For The Minnesota

Here's a couple of sets of ads that we offer for your approval. This first group comes from the workshop of Cliff Gill of the Minnesota Theatre, Minneapolis, and represents part of his campaign on "Dance, Fools, Dance," latest vehicle turned out by Joan Crawford.

Note the black and white tone of the ads, a common practice in the West and Mid-West. You've all seen what Frank Whitbeck has done along these lines, and by studying Gill's layout you can readily see that Whitbeck's theory of selling is one that packs a punch. You will notice that the ads contain no great amount of cuts, and absolutely no superfluous copy. The ads, in addition to plugging the picture, plug also the vaudeville acts, or presentation. Use this type of ad, if you think it will go over in your town.

Now take this other group, designed for a college magazine by one of the members of the advertising department, Hale Cavanaugh, said to be the Beau Brummel of the Twin Cities (another member of Gill's staff is Bob McDonald, who sneaks through tie-ups.) Cavanaugh is up from the managerial ranks. Look his ads over. They show originality (though somewhat on the style of "The New Yorker") and might perhaps prove a welcome relief to you from your regular ads. If local conditions permit your using them, perhaps they'd click for you. Think it over.

Oke Cliff, we're certainly glad to see that you are stepping right along. Give our regards to your efficient help and tell them that we'd like to see some more of their work. And plenty of yours, too.

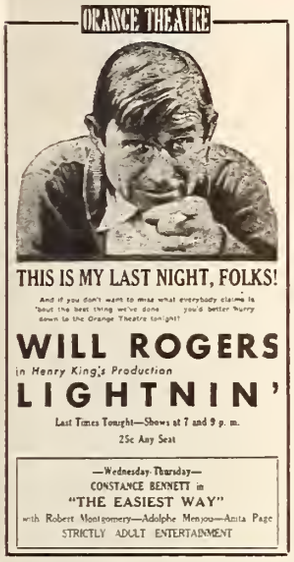
Humorad Clark Used Went Over Great In Bloom'gton, Indiana

Have you ever used a "Humorad"? You probably know that it consists of contracting the editor or advertising manager of a paper and arranging to run a special plug on the paper's advertising value by the insertion by the paper of an ad called a "Humorad," in which is explained that advertising men, as a change from the routine order of description, often like to write humorous copy. The ad then goes on to state that the paper offers its readers an opportunity to write a comic ad, as would be written by the comedians in the picture current at the local theatre. (In this case the show being plugged was "See America Thirst.") Two ads are then placed in the notice, one a regular ad, and the other a sample "Humorad." The readers of the paper are then invited to rewrite any ad in the paper in a humorous vein.

Arthur B. Clark, manager of the Indiana Theatre, in Bloomington, Ind., was the showman who used the Humorad on "See America Thirst" when it played his house. The stunt met with favor from the local public, the advertisers, and the editor. It met with special favor from the editor, especially so since some of the Humorads were inserted in the paper as regular ads by the merchants. The prize for the best Humorads are tickets to the show. We'll give you here a sample of a Humorad. Let us say the ad is selling luggage. Well, here's how the Humorad reads: "It's In the Bag! What? You Ask. Ahhh! That's It! Value, Maybe, But Perhaps That's Not All. Anything Else You Find You Can Keep—But This Is No Promise. Wherever You Are Leaving for—Mustard-on-the-Frankfort or Mudflats-by-the-Sea, Inspect Our Line, and Hear It, Too! Everyone Will Turn Around and Look At Your Luggage If You Buy It Here and You Will Blush, But With Pride. We Specialize In Trunks for Elephants, Proving That No Order Is Too Big for Us. We Have Nothing to 'Hide'."

Get the idea? Perhaps you can use it in your town. Thanks, Arthur, for passing along this sample of your work. We'd like some more, too. And listen, give our regards to our many friends on the Vonderschmitt Amusement Circuit and tell them we'd like to hear from them. Thanks.

"When the Times Are Hard"



When the times are hard and the people are not buying, is the very time that advertising should be the heaviest. You want to get people in to see what you have to sell, and you must advertise to do that.

When times are good they will come of their own accord. But I believe in advertising all the time. I never stop advertising.—John Wanamaker.

Like Moss' Method Of Plugging Last Show Of Feature Picture?

We are glad to report that Dick Moss is still on the go and rapidly getting to know the public of Orange, Cal., where Dick is now handling the Orange Theatre for the newly formed Hughes-Franklin circuit.

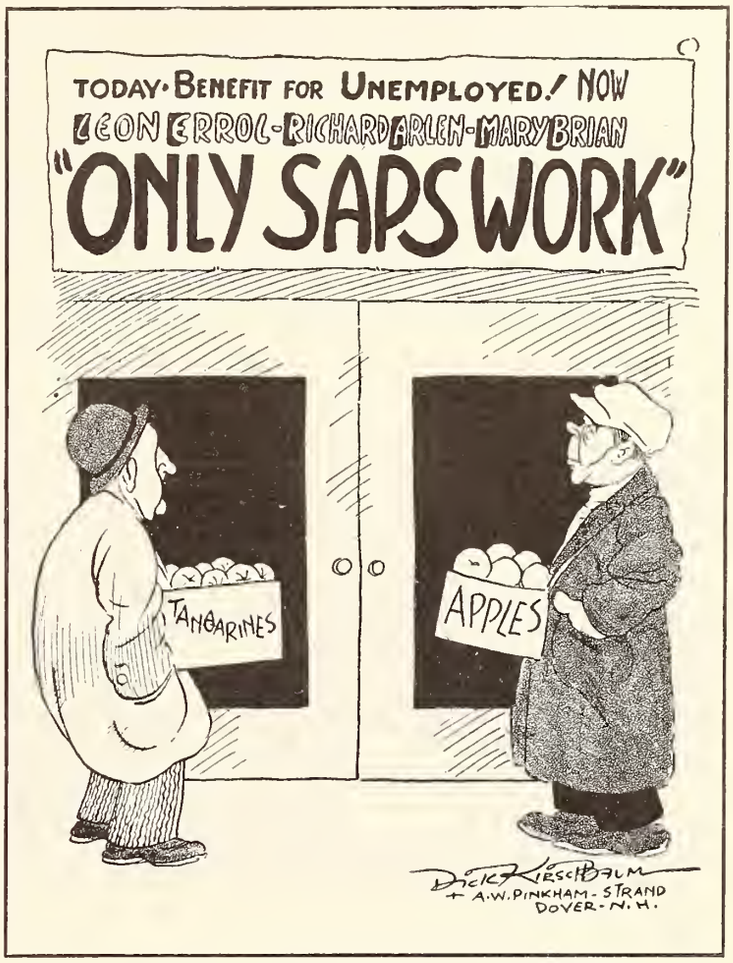
And talking about the new circuit. Dick got a break when he first arrived in town. He talked the Chamber of Commerce into sending out a letter to all of the residents to the effect that new management had taken over the operation of the local theatre. This was a fine institutional plug for the circuit.

Not so long after, Dick played "Cimarron," and the co-operation he obtained on his selling of the picture more than showed him that he is going to like the town. Through the courtesy of the principal, the playdates were announced at the local high school. Then Dick secured a couple of miniature models of covered wagons and placed them in a window in one of the best spots in town. Chalk up another winner for him!

His Mickey Mouse Club, newly formed, is going over to excellent results, and he tries hard to have something new for the kiddies every week in order to retain their interest. Recently he arranged with a local dancing school to present its kiddie pupils on the stage of the theatre, as a special treat for the Club members.

The newspaper, a daily, is more than willing to co-operate with Dick in all ways. As a result, the showman is enabled to turn out some good advertising in the town. Which is why we are showing the Will Rogers ad. Look it over and see how cleverly Dick has arranged it, by making it so that Rogers talks direct to the reader. How would this stunt work for you? Think it will click? Then use it! We want to wish Dick lots of luck on his job and we are sure that the activity that has characterized his work ever since he has been on the Coast will be continued.

Meet Jake And Laz Abraham, Showmen From Mississippi



Jake and Laz. Abraham managers and proprietors of the Happyland Theatre, Port Gibson, Miss., have a good break. In addition to being in the show business they are also in the merchandise business. But they never let either business interfere with the other. They sell their shows the way showmen sell them, and their merchandise business the way businessmen sell them. What's the difference, you ask? Figure it out for yourself. Here's what the two Abrahahams do to stimulate business at the theatre they have been running for the past ten years.

When they played "Amos 'n' Andy" recently, they secured an old time Ford and painted it up with sayings such as are used by the dialectians for their films. Two men, made up in blackface, drove the car about town. A tame monkey accompanied them. The flivver stopped at the schools about the time they were dismissing children for the day. The kids were certainly enthused about the idea. When the monkey and the flivver were not being driven about town, they were placed on a vacant lot. A large sign announced the film at the Happyland. The picture, as a result of this one stunt, held up well for the three days of the engagement.

Jake and Laz. have other gags also. They use a new one every Monday night, long a poor night at the theatre. On one Monday ladies are admitted free when accompanied by men. On another Monday, men are admitted free when accompanied by ladies. Still another Monday, the whole family will be admitted for the price of one. Other gags are Old Maids Free and Bachelor Girls Free, another reduced price nights when admission is sliced in half. These gags always meet with favorable response in the town. And let's see you go into Port Gibson and find someone who doesn't know where the Happyland Theatre is located and the name of the current picture. Let's have some more, Jake.

Placing Bookmarks In Fan Mags At The Local Stores Clicks

All five and ten stores, as you know, sell fan magazines. What, then, is more logical than that the showman wishing to secure publicity for his house contact the store and arrange to have bookmarks placed in the magazine. A showman using the plan is J. F. O'Hern, manager of the Olympia Theatre in Chelsea, Mass., up in New England.

Whenever he can, O'Hern sends to the local Woolworth and Kresge stores a bookmark plugging his shows. The copy reads: "A Book-mark for Olympia Theatre Fans" (then follows a Publix slug). In a small box, in small type, is placed stories of the stars and photoplays displayed in this magazine will be seen shortly at the Olympia Theatre. To make your reading and picture entertainment more interesting, call the theatre and ask for coming dates, phone number, store plug and address. This stunt goes over very well in Chelsea. The stores like it, and the results are gratifying to the theatre.

Another gag, a recent one, that caused a bit of laughter, was the novel herald that O'Hern turned out to plug "Rain or Shine" and "Lightnin'." The herald was made up in prescription form and stated that Dr. Will Rogers and Dr. Joe Cook advised that as a tonic for the blues the public should see (pictures). The heralds were made up at small cost and more than paid for themselves in added business.

We want to thank O'Hern for passing along these few items as we are sure that they will receive a good reception by his fellow Club members. We hope to hear from you again in the near future, "J. F."

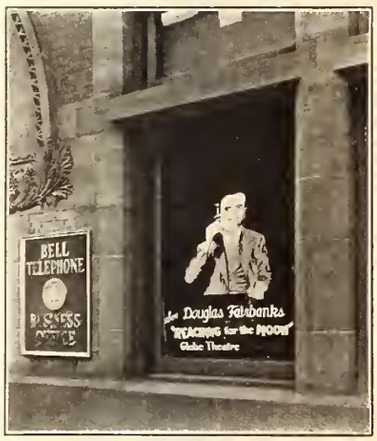
Street Ballyhoo Of Goebel Theatres Was Good Plug For Film

The showmen selling the shows playing Goebel Theatres, Inc., of Bristol, Va., are a live-wire group who take a great deal of interest in their houses. We hope to have some of their work to pass along in the very near future, but at this time we want to say a word or two about a recent stunt pulled by H. Somerville, assistant general manager of the circuit and a real live-wire.



As a matter of fact, the photo we are showing speaks for itself. But we think that we'll tell you the gag was used when "The Big Trail" played in Bristol. This was the first time a street ballyhoo had been used, of this type, in the town. As a result, the residents more than paid attention to it. The covered wagon is not a real covered wagon, but an old wagon converted into a replica of an old settler's wagon train. Compoboard and canvas made up the desired effect. A large sheet of compoboard plugged the picture back of the wagon and special banners alongside also plugged it. That the ballyhoo was an effective one was seen in the standing room only business that was done all week.

Listen, Mr. Somerville, we want to hear some more about what is going on at the various houses of your circuit. Let's have some dope on it, and at the same time include a photo of yourself, so that we can give you a regular introduction. Oke?

Phone Company Was Tied Up By Gammett On Fairbanks Film

Harry Gammett was playing "Reaching for the Moon" with Doug Fairbanks, at the Globe Theatre in Bethlehem, Pa., so he decided to do some reaching for business as well. He certainly showed himself to have a long reach.

In the photo we are showing you can see what he did to plug Doug. A tie-up was made with the telephone company and they agreed to place in their windows life-sized photos of Doug holding a French phone, which the company had been featuring for some time. In order still further to stimulate interest in the picture, and the phones, the telephone company loaned Gammett a number of the French phones, in colors, which were placed on display in the lobby.

Then Gammett got another fine break. The local newspaper shot a photo of the display in the telephone company's window and ran a four-column cut of it, which, you will agree, is free space grabbing with a vengeance. Gammett also landed some more space by running a contest on the classified page of the paper, in which he offered free tickets to the first ten persons to correctly answer five questions pertaining to ads current in the paper. This stunt met with immediate acceptance in Bethlehem.

We don't think that we are far from wrong in stating that nearly everyone in Bethlehem saw the picture, are we Harry? And listen, when you see Frank Mickley and our other friends around your way, tell them we'd like to hear from them. Oke?

A Newsy House Organ

The house organ reproduced below is published in the form of a tabloid newspaper, which will immediately explain the reason why it is laid out in this particular form. And even a quick glance will show that it is not thrown together like so much hash; on the contrary, it seems to us that it is carefully planned from beginning to end.

R. L. Nellis, if we are not mistaken, is the showman responsible for this fine program newsette. He has been an active member for many years in the Club and his rare lapses of silence generally denote hard work; perhaps that is why we are always glad to hear from him. He is now located at the Strand Theatre in Kendallville, Ind., where we expect he will continue his usual fine brand of live-wire showmanship. We're wishing him luck and we know he'll come through.

Cookies To Kids Were B. O. Sweet Cookies At Russ Rose's House

Keep your eye on the kid business around the vicinity of the Strand Theatre in Reading, Pa., and watch the way it will pick up with Russell O. Rose making a play for it.

Many of the Club members are already acquainted with Russell, who in the past has handled a couple of houses in Philadelphia. Well, Russell recently arrived at the Strand in Reading, and noting that the kid business could stand a little pushing up, he set out to bring the youngsters into the house.

He made an advantageous and excellent tie-up that resulted in his obtaining a quantity of cookies. When he announced at the theatre that he was going to give them away on the following Saturday the youngsters were certainly enthusiastic. And they turned out in a mob for the next Saturday's show and the free cookies!

And another of Russell's activities also went over fine not so long ago. This was a whoopee party on the stage, billed as "Russ Rose's Whoopee Party" and using local talent. It certainly went over in a big way. Now that Russell has joined the rest of the live-wires in Reading the town will be hotter than ever for showmanship. We expect it to sizzle plenty! Let's hear from you again, Russ.

Essaness Circuit's Houses Grabbed An Ace Publicity Plug

There are, as we have many times declared, hundreds, even thousands, of ways in which a live-wire showman can grab off a flock of publicity for his house if he takes the trouble to check up on his local opportunities. This point is demonstrated again in the tie-up arranged by H. Elisburg of the Essaness Theatres in Chicago, Illinois.

The Essaness houses, a chain of community theatres, are quite well known in the Chicago, suburbs. But the showmen handling the publicity on the chain decided that they'd grab off a lot of good will and publicity at the same time. Accordingly, a contact was made with one of the largest chain drug stores in the city, that was productive of the desired objective. The drug store paid for the printing of a quantity of large circulars plugging their product. The back page carried the week's program current at fifteen of the circuit houses.

To stimulate interest in the herald, the circuit agreed to permit, for five days, parents to bring the children to the theatres, buy an adult ticket, and the kid would be admitted free. The stunt went over great, being more than enthusiastically received. We want to thank Elisburg for letting us see what is done on the Essaness circuit and we hope that we'll hear some more of the chain's activities in the near future.

It Pays To Advertise Was Proven To Hyde By Co-Operative Page

There's a new film on the market tabbed "It Pays to Advertise," and many showmen are using the title as a basis to secure a co-operative full page or double truck ad in their newspapers as a plug on the picture to eventually sell it. The move has proven one of value, as in few cases will the merchants demur at taking space in the layout. When Bolivar Hyde, Jr., played the picture at the Paramount Theatre in Montgomery, Ala., he, too, grabbed off a full page of ads.

Bolivar pulled a fast one—and a valuable one—on the layout by injecting a contest in which anyone was offered an opportunity to write an ad, conforming to the same measurements as any one of those of the five dealers and the theatre. The best ads, it was announced, would be given prizes. Both cash and tickets were offered. It was announced in the page spread that all ads submitted automatically became the property of the paper, to be used as seen fit. The paper also supplied the judges.

The stunt went over to pretty good results, a number of ads being submitted. Perhaps you can use this stunt in your town, too. The idea's not bad, judging from Hyde's success. And you know, "it pays to advertise."

Can you tie any of the above events into your theatre's activities?

And don't overlook the many local events that are constantly turning up right in your own town, county or state.

Keep an eye on "The Showman's Calendar" for an advance tip on future holidays and events.

National Music Week

May 3rd to 10th

This annual event offers tremendous possibilities to live-wire showmen who know how to take advantage of it.

Tie-ups with your various musical organizations, churches, choral unions and societies, special musical attractions in the theatre, over your organ, or through the use of special musical sound pictures, are but a few quick guesses aimed at this one.

The time is short. But not too short for you to be able to work out something to the advantage of everybody concerned, especially your theatre. If the local high school boasts of a good orchestra, give them a night at your theatre. Ditto for any other orchestras in the city (keep away from jazz bands).

One thing you must keep in mind is that National Music Week was created, not for the boosting of interest in popular ditties, but for the better and more classical type of music. Don't spoil it by confusing the idea with some sort of a band contest on the stage of your theatre. Keep to the small local or symphony orchestra idea and aim your appeal to that class of patronage with a love for good music.

Don't let your screen be idle on this one. Make sure that you book special musical sound reels that fit into the spirit of the occasion.

Morrow Promoted To Bigger Spot; Here Is Some Of His Work

Here's a special double truck that Floyd D. Morrow, former manager of the Warners' Sherman Theatre in Chillicothe, Ohio, turned out before he left the town to take over his new job—and promotion—as City Manager for Warners' four houses in Portsmouth, a mighty important assignment.

As you all know, Floyd is right there with the goods when it comes to turning out advertising and exploitation that will mean something to a theatre. He wasn't lacking when it came to batting out an ace double truck on "The Easiest Way" when it played the theatre. Look over the cut we are showing of the stunt and you will see that it is easily adaptable to any picture you might want to plug. In all of the ads, Floyd has placed cut-up bits of pictures of movie stars—not necessarily in the picture, there being but one star in the group who is in the film. The idea is that readers of the page are invited to paste together the scattered photographs, and from the completed set pick out a star in the picture. The photos of the five stars are run intact in the theatre ad.

This ad is one that ought to click in any man's town. Should local conditions permit your using it, why not give it a chance? If you want any more dope on the way Floyd makes up these special pages, drop him a line after he's set at his new spot. Thanks, Floyd, for the nice sentiments you express about the Club. We want to wish you luck on your new job

Street Ballyhoos Are Invaluable In Phillips' Selling

One thing that J. H. Phillips, managing director of the Eagle Theatre on Third Avenue in New York City, has found is that street ballyhoos, for his neighborhood, are especially valuable to him in the selling of his shows. We are showing a photo of one of his recent ballyhoos so that you can see what he uses to bring them to the box-office.

When he played "All Quiet" recently, Phillips sent out on the street a float made up to represent a battlefield. It was as complete in detail as conditions permitted it to be made. Two men dressed in German uniforms, sat on the float as it cruised about the street. Making up the battlefield effect were shells, barbed wire, machine guns, shrapnel, hand grenades, rifles, etc. Besides this a few placards plugged the picture. Alongside the float a banner was strung. The entire effect was one well qualified to attract the eye, and as a result it attracted crowds of persons. The picture received a fine plug, and business boomed.

Another recent street ballyhoo that Phillips used, this time for the Photoplay Theatre when the house played "Morocco" was a man dressed as an Arab who rode a horse about the streets, and whenever a crowd gathered would run the animal through a few tricks. The stunt, like the one above, proved to be a business getter. Oke, "J. H." keep us posted on what else you are doing to keep them coming to your theatre, will you?

"Spumoni Says So"; And Continued To Until The Opening

"Spumoni Says So" had all of Piqua, Ohio, doing some form or other of talking recently. And it was all due to the stunt pulled by H. W. Byrd, whose photo we are showing, when he wanted to get in an advance plug on "See America Thirst," at the Mays Theatre.

As those showmen who have played the films are aware, Spumoni is the king of gangdom, and whatever he says goes; hence "Spumoni Says So." Snipes, 4x16 were made up and placed all over town. All that the snipes read were "Spumoni Says So." The whole town was flooded with the catchline. Before two days had gone by, everyone in town was wondering just what Spumoni was doing so much endorsing for. Newspaper ads also carried the mysterious line.

As a follow up on the stunt, Byrd distributed a quantity of pay envelopes imprinted with copy: "See America Thirst—Spumoni Says So." It got so around town that the catchline was being used in ordinary conversation. You can be sure that by the time Byrd was finished with the teaser campaign and broke with the announcement of the picture, the town knew plenty about it. We don't doubt but that this part of his campaign was in more ways than one responsible for a large amount of extra business at the box-office. Are we right on the subject, "H. W.?"

PLEASE advise us at once in case of change of address. Thank you.

Snowed In, Macris Lays Off Ballyhoos For A Little While

Our showman representative from Wellsville, N. Y., sends us in a photo of himself, so we are going to take this means of introducing you to Orestes Macris, assistant manager and exploitation man for Temple Theatre.

The Temple Theatre is managed by Macris' dad, who also owns the house. To Orestes falls the job of selling the shows at the Temple. Macris, Sr., buys and books them, and his son tries to sell them. We have shown a few examples of his work so you know that he is right there when it comes to displaying showmanship. He has taken quite a bit of interest in his local community and he knows that street ballyhoos and marquee cut-outs are a very effective medium for him. But of late he has not been able to use either. The winds have been too high and the snow too deep. Which accounts for an absence of his work on our pages.

He has been an active member ever since joining the Club and we are of the opinion that he will continue his activity as soon as conditions permit him to get his campaigns out in the open. Oke, Orestes, keep up the good work and remember we like to see what you are doing from time to time.

Georgas Promotes A Full Page Co-Op Ad From Dealers W'kly

Promoting free space in his local newspaper has always been more or less a habit with Chris Georgas, manager of the Classic Theatre in Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada.

Just recently Chris promoted another load of free space for his theatre by arranging a plan with the local editor whereby a full page was to be devoted weekly to co-operative ads. The first week of the stunt went over very well and there is no reason to doubt but that the succeeding weeks will do likewise. In order to stimulate interest in the page, Chris weekly offers 10 guest tickets to the persons who can pick out from the ads assembled the name of the picture playing locally. In order to ascertain the name of the picture, it is first necessary to consult the theatre's ad. And you may be sure that it is consulted often, which is another way of making sure that the ad is read.

The plan is going over very well for Georgas and it is interesting to learn that both the paper and the merchants are well pleased at the results obtained. We don't have to say that Chris is satisfied. Do we, Chris?

McDowell and Flowers!

Walter McDowell, quick to take advantage of the tie-up with florists that Easter offers, featured a special flower show in the lobby of the house he manages, Loew's State Theatre, Louisville, Ky.

Many beautiful specimens were on view during the show, and the immense banks of flowers were plentifully commented upon. Fifteen local florists took part in the exhibit, the purpose of which was to show the public what the Louisville Retail Florists' Association was offering in the way of horticultural specimens.

Rouda Featured A Co-Operative Gag At The Lane Court

In an effort to boost business at his house recently, H. M. Rouda, manager of the Lane Court Theatre in Chicago, Ill., tried a co-operative stunt with his local merchants. We are passing along this stunt so that you can look it over and see what it did for Rouda.

Forty merchants, all members of the Liberty Park Community Merchants' Association were tied-up on the stunt. They purchased rolls of tickets at five dollars a thousand. These tickets had space left on the back for name and address of holders. Whenever a patron entered any of the stores in on the stunt and purchased any of the dealers' products for 25 cents or over, the patron received one of these tickets. The tickets were supposed to be deposited in a box at the theatre. Every Friday night, Rouda had drawn from the box—which was placed on the stage—25 of these tickets. Persons whose names were drawn were then given gift certificates entitling them to a dollar's worth of merchandise at any of the stores participating in the plan and whose names and addresses were listed on the back of the certificate. The certificates, after they had been cashed in at the dealers, were redeemable at the local bank by the merchants, they receiving a dollar for every one turned in. The theatre paid the dollar to the bank, leaving weekly a sum of money to cover presentation of the certificates. The way the theatre benefitted, we are informed, is that the house was permitted to sell the tickets at a quarter apiece.

There's the plan, and we understand that while it did not click so well for the theatre, it at least helped the merchants, thereby gaining their good-will for the house. If you'd like any dope on the stunt you can drop a line to Rouda and we are sure that he'll supply the desired information. Thanks, "H. M.," for passing this one along. Let's hear some more about your work, too.

Halmi Turning Out Ace Art Work!

Under the supervision of T. Z. Halmi, the RKO houses in Fort Wayne, Ind., are getting a brand of art work which ranks with the finest in the country. We recently told you something about this poster artist's fine creations and we now take particular pleasure in passing along three more.

The front on "Fifty Million Frenchmen" was finished completely in green, silver and black. While a little difficult to visualize from a photo, close inspection will quickly reveal many outstanding points. The special display on "Laugh and Get Rich" is one of the finest ever reproduced on these pages and must have been a magnet to the eye of the patrons passing it in the lobby of the theatre. The black velvet background was composed of triple thickness; cutout letters, shaded with shades of yellow and red; treasure chest, gold and brown with the money made up of beaver board circles in gold and gold tinsel; figure, natural flesh color, dollar mark with gold tinsel, sides shades of yellow, 6 inches thick. The Fairbanks front consisted of Turquoise blues for the heads with magenta shading, while letters were all cutout stuff in black.

Regardless of how large or small a scale you handle your own art displays, these reproductions should prove helpful and suggest new ideas to pep up your lobby and front.

New York Paramount's Dispensary Rates Patron Praise!

Too much cannot be said about the excellent service given patrons of the Paramount Theatre in New York City by the hospital dispensary on the ninth floor of the building.

Here emergency cases are taken care of, and the dispensary is equipped to perform all sorts of minor operations from taking a cinder or a piece of dirt out of a patron's eye, to relief from fainting spells; the latter being one of the most common cases.

So courteous and efficient are the nurses in charge that praise of their work is often heard on Broadway. The Paramount is to be complimented on this invaluable service.

Hartung Staged A Treasure Hunt To Sell "Tom Sawyer"

Having read, no doubt, of the successful treasure hunts that have been staged in the past by his fellow members of the Managers' Round Table Club, J. A. Hartung, manager of the Stratford Theatre in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., ran one in conjunction with a clothing dealer on "Tom Sawyer."

The treasure hunt started from the merchant's store and finally ended in a parking space near the theatre where the treasures were hidden. The boys carried banners and placards announcing that "Tom Sawyer" was being shown at the Stratford.

The treasure hunt was preceded by the distribution of 4,000 heralds and 6,000 throwaways—describing the Treasure Hunt as well as copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. The treasure consisted of two "Tom Sawyer" suits, two "Tom Sawyer" shirts, two "Tom Sawyer" blouses and a few guest tickets to see the picture.

The merchant had an excellent window display with a set of 14 x 17 photos and window cards announcing the attraction, etc. This merchant also ran several large ads in the morning and evening papers in which he gave the picture and theatre the greater portion of space. With the exception of the guest tickets, all of the above material, including printing, etc., was paid for by the merchant.

We want to thank Hartung for passing along this account of his work as we are sure that it will receive the favorable reception which it merits. Keep us posted on your future work, too, "J. A.," so that we can let the rest of the Club see the live-wire work you are turning out in your section of the country.

Slee Landed Grand Break In Paper For Three Days In Row

An advance plug that was one of the biggest ever given a showman in Allentown, Pa., was obtained recently by Warren A. Slee, manager of the Colonial Theatre, who pulled the stunt in conjunction with his showing of "Scandal Sheet." "Scandal Sheet," featuring George Bancroft, has as its story background a newspaper office and a hard boiled managing editor. It is the credo of the editor that anything of news value is fit to print, be it clean or sordid. Well, as an advance plug for the picture, Slee contacted the local editor of an Allentown paper and managed to secure a teaser streamer on the bottom of the 3rd page, 1st section, stating: "SCANDAL SHEET EDITOR ARRESTED" (Story on Page 13). On Page 13 Slee landed another teaser, this time in the form of a publicity story headed: "Scandal Sheet Editor Is Jailed; Says He Doesn't Care If It's Fit to Print Or Not."

These two breaks were the first of the series of three, the final one stating the picture and playdates. But here's how Slee managed to land such a corking break. A few days before, a certain Scandal Sheet, read by a great majority of persons, was acquitted in a libel case against a party of local importance. It was a sure thing then, that anything appearing in anotner paper and bearing, to all indications, something on the recent legal entanglement, would most assuredly be read. Neither Slee nor the editor were wrong in their deductions. Slee asks us for our opinion of the gag, but in keeping with the "All for One and One for All" policy of the Club, we submit the question to you. Write in, if you like, and tell us about it so that we can give your views on the subject.

Thanks, Warren, for keeping us posted on your work. We are glad to note that you are continuing the activity that has characterized your work to date and we are sure you'll keep it running along on high. Right?

"The Shoppers' Tribune" of St. Louis, Mo., is, we presume, a paper that is distributed direct to the homes of the St. Louis residents. It contains ads and shopping news on and of the various stores of the Missouri city. The editors and the showman handling the Loew's State Theatre got together recently and decided to stage a stunt in order to test the pulling power of the ads.

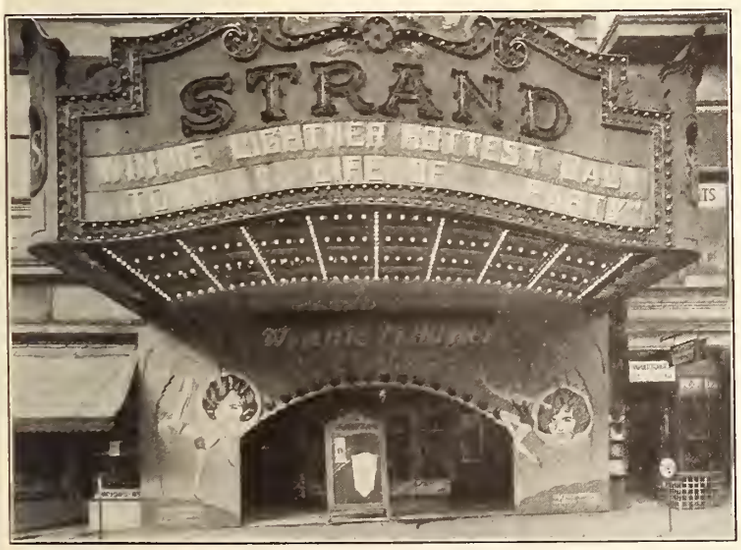
The picture playing the theatre at the time was "The Devil to Pay," and the showman agreed to donate, as part of his campaign for selling the show, free tickets, to those readers of the "Shoppers' Tribune" sending in the best criticisms of the ads run in the paper. We are showing a photo of what happened when the paper announced the contest. Over four thousand letters were received! That's what happened.

Here's a stunt that you might be able to work in conjunction with your own local newspaper. Offer free tickets for the best criticisms received of the ads that are run either in the regular section or the amusement page of the paper. It is also possible that you can tie up the local merchants on this stunt. Give it a little consideration and if you think it will prove of aid to you in grabbing publicity and building business at your house, make use of it to suit local conditions. Oke?

Plugging the Organist

A showman offers the suggestion that organ solos can be given considerable plugging through a tie-up with a local paper whereby the theatre offers free tickets daily for the best "nonsense verses" sent to the paper to be printed there and then turned over to the theatre to be included in the next week's organ presentation.

The organist can very easily use tunes that will fit the "nonsense" verses providing they are of four lines each and not too long. They can also be written so as to touch on subjects of local importance, local personalities, and those in the papers frequently. The contest is a natural for a three-weeks break in any paper. Should the showman be located in a town where the paper is a weekly, this should not hinder him from using the stunt. As a matter of fact, a "Request Numbers" column can be run weekly, and patrons can check off the musical numbers they wish played as part of the program.



Rosenthal Got Lots Of Publicity On His High Hat First Night

When he played "Hell's Angels" at the Strand Theatre in Albany, N. Y., Robert Rosenthal, manager of the Warner house, turned out a campaign that had plenty of pep in it.

The premiere of the picture was set for a midnight unreeling and it was decided to make the showing a dress affair. And it was one of the biggest ever seen in Albany. Invitations were sent to the Governor, State Senators, Assemblymen, New York State aviation commission, Lt. Governor, and high officials of the State Department of War. As the celebrities arrived at the theatre, their entrance was broadcast over the air. The newspaper had given the special showing plenty of plugging, and immense crowds lined along the police lines set on both sides of the theatre. A stunt, incidentally, that helped a lot to advertise the picture, was that of having three planes, lettered "Strand—Hell's Angels," flying over the city, blowing sirens and dropping smoke screens in midair. An excellent move was that of having a local aviator, who had taken part in the filming of the production, talk on the shooting of the various highlights.

We are showing here another medium that helped boost the picture—the front Rosenthal created for it. Look it over and see how he has managed to secure a maximum of advertising at minimum results. Any wonder, in view of such work, that the picture clicked?

Below we show another picture, this time one on "The Life of the Party" display that was used when the film played the theatre. Here you can get a close-up view of the way Rosenthal uses a large piece of beaverboard to plug his film. Incidentally, you might look over his marquee copy and see the catchy lines he uses to tell the world (in Albany) about Winnie Lightner. Would that copy sell for you? Seeing that Rosenthal is always on the go at his house, we hope that he'll be represented on our pages again.

Trailer Prologue As Presented By Brenon Went Over Very Well

As is his custom—since he knows from past experience that it clicks—Herbert Brenon, Jr., manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Gardner, Mass., put on a special prologue to "The Bat Whispers."

A costume was made up of black material to resemble that of a bat. The man wearing it was placed behind the traveler and next to the screen. The outer plush curtain was lowered and the funeral march of the Marionettes was played on the non-sync and all the house lights with the exception of the exits were taken out.

A dark green spot was shown upon the outer curtain as it began to rise. This spot outlined the shadow of the bat character behind the traveler. The traveler was then opened and the bat walked forward to stage No. 1. The effect was very well received and created a great deal of comment relative to who the bat might be in real life and just what he was going to do at that time.

The bat then walked to stage right in accompaniment with the music and walked slowly up aisle No. 1 and down aisle No. 2—much to the amazement and good-natured surprise of the patrons. As he reached the stage, he backed up against the screen and the traveler was closed in while the plush curtain lowered. When the plush curtain touched the stage, the feature picture title flashed upon the screen as 12 gongs were rung on a chime backstage.

The comment and reaction to this small presentation was very good and Brenon felt that it helped to bring in a great number of persons; perhaps just to have a glance at the bat and try and guess who he really was. The cost of the presentation to the theatre was nothing.

And when that can be obtained, along with loads of publicity, who'll say that trailer prologues are not valuable?

Showmanship—Fifteen Years Ago - - - !

Tommy Costello, live-wire manager of the American Theatre in Washington, D. C., for the Atkinson Chain (yep, they had chains 15 years ago) pulled a good one when he announced that chaperons would be furnished for young folks patronizing his theatre . . . George Bleicli, manager of the Empress Theatre in Owensboro, Ky., injected many novel angles into his house organ when he started stressing the personal slant into his appeal for patronage . . . sounds sorta modern to hear something like that . . . Being his own flag-pole sitter or steeplejack, as you will, is the way we would caption the doings of Bob Jennings, who, at that time, was running the Brewster Town Hall Theatre in Brewster, N. Y., but to get back to the important point in this story; he let loose a flock of toy balloons from the roof of the tallest building in town to advertise "The Mysteries of Myra" . . . some titles in those days! . . . Managers Gerber and Hess of the Majestic Theatre in Dayton, Ohio, took advantage of a local newspaper's giveaway of star rotos by announcing that Blanche Sweet, whose photo was due for distribution on the day they played her in a new attraction, would be the star in the Majestic's current program and patrons could secure beautiful pictures of Miss Sweet through the local paper . . . Yazoo City, Miss., at present represented in the Club by several showmen, is listed in this week's "Fifteen Years Ago" column through the activities of George C. Cacum who managed the Yazoo Theatre that far back . . . he takes the honors of 1916 for ambition in connection with the hand-out of a special throwaway which he distributed himself at 4:30 every morning throughout the community . . . maybe that 4:30 business is a little far-fetched . . . but if he liked getting up at that hour the pleasure was all his . . . If you think a novelty circular in the form of imprinted wall paper is new, let us disillusion you right now because the Regent Theatre in Alameda, Cal., used the gag way, way back when show-business was a business and not a pain-in-the-neck . . . Manager Douglas Creighton of the Globe Theatre in Vancouver created a lot of public sentiment in his favor when he invited the entire 158th Battalion to be his guests at the theatre prior to their entraining for summer camp . . . and he was not asleep when he made sure that they would march to the theatre in a body, thereby attracting no end of attention . . . Emery N. Downs, manager of the Atlas Amusement Company of Cleveland, Ohio, proved he knew theatre operation and patron catering when he issued some much needed advice to other showmen on the question of handling crowds in a busy theatre . . . his article on this subject attracted wide-spread interest all over the country . . . and while on the subject . . . maybe some of those deluxers on Broadway could learn something from Emery . . . ? C. I. Ramsdell who guided the destinies of the Lyric Theatre in Lincoln, Neb., worked out an effective electric display to advertise "The Iron Claw" . . . the gag consisted of a large iron claw with the lettering and play dates illuminated from within . . . nice work even in these days, sez we . . . what sez you? . . . and here is one for the boys who make their first automobile banner tie-up to think about . . . Bill Roper, owner and manager of the Roper Theatre out in Council Bluffs, Ia., arranged for large banners on the sides of several cars to be changed weekly . . . and according to what we read about it now the cash customers sure took notice . . . In order to secure maximum coverage for his peppy house organ, H. P. Wareham of the Wareham Theatre in Manhattan, Kansas, made use of all the listings in his local telephone directory, the city director and through slides on his screen asking for patrons' addresses . . . and what a wedge that list was to plugging his many attractions . . . and jjust to prove that show-women were not unknown in those days, let us tell you that Maude Littlefield, manager of the Electric Theatre in Claremore, Okla., was responsible for a "clean-up" stunt whereby she admitted free all children who brought to the theatre twenty old tin cans or bottles . . . jimminy! . . . and it was only about five years ago that a certain showman tried to tell us that he pulled that gag for the "first" time himself . . . well, well, we really wonder how far back some of those "new and original" ideas really go? . . . 'snuff said, we'll have more to tell you next week. . . .

TYING UP A WHOLE CITY!

FRANK B. HILL PROVES THAT IT CAN BE DONE!

There is in the motion picture industry a class of showmen who are never satisfied unless they can be doing something progressive along the lines of showselling. Picture after picture attraction after attraction, and show after show is sold in a high caliber and high powered style. Not a civic event goes on but that a progressive showman is in some measure a participant. The mere mention of a benefit show, a project to aid the unemployed, or a call to help the distressed is all necessary to secure the hearty co-operation of an alert showman.

The public notices these things, whether it appears to or not. How can one help but see work that reflects towards betterment, and the benefit of the city or town itself? That is why the type of showmen on whom we are discoursing find their houses doing good business at all times. And not only is business good, but the good-will that is tendered the theatre by the town assures the certainty of the house and the showman procuring one hundred percent co-operation whenever such co-operation is needed. Small wonder then that we find most of the progressive showmen holding down fine positions, jobs of trust and responsibility; and find them also to be a credit to their community.

One such showman whose name can be found in the above mentioned group is Frank Hill, of the Liberty Theatre, Walla Walla, Washington. Hill is employed by the Inland Theatres Circuit Inc., a chain headed by Senior and Junior Mercy, operating houses in Washington and Oregon. Frank Hill is very well known among the show circles of the Pacific Northwest section.

Followers of the Round Table Club pages in MOTION PICTURE HERALD will immediately recall, upon mention of Hill's name, the wonderful work he has turned out in the past along the lines of showselling by newspaper advertising. Hill has so throughly studied conditions existing on his circuit that he knows to a "T," the type of ad that will best click for the house plugged.

This same system is current in all of the houses of the circuit. Realizing the value of knowing local conditions, the local likes and dislikes of their respective public, the other showmen on the chain have been quick to adopt Hill's line of work. The weekly results prove the plan's value.

When Hill planned his campaign on "Cimarron" he probably never thought it would develop into so thorough a community proposition, but it did and we felt that it was deserving of special mention, not only as a tribute to Hill but as a guide to those who want to know how other managers engineer successful campaigns. And, incidentally, there is one attractive slant to all of Hill's exploitation; it rarely costs the theatre any money.

Now much has been said about Hill's advertising. But little has been said about his other work, very important work to be sure. This work is his exploiting of shows. Advertising a picture to the nth degree does not necessarily imply that the said picture is going to click for excellent box-office results. If such should be the case, all necessary for a showman would be for him to sit down and figure out his advertising campaign, and that concluded, sit back and take his ease. Of course, there would always be the distressing thought that his job was in constant jeopardy by the presence of advertising men or advertising agencies. So perhaps it's a lucky thing that a showman has to do more than advertising to sell his show.

Hill has been represented on the Managers' Round Table Club pages with but one or two examples of his exploitation work, that part of his campaigns which form a mighty important contribution to the success of any show.

But exploitation, as has been shown before, is worthless unless the show can deliver the goods. Exploitation might bring them in, but it can't bring them back unless the picture reached the value set by the superlatives hurled at the public by the showman. This is an inevitable and foregone conclusion, and explains why the wise showman is careful to either see the picture he is plugging, or lay out his campaign in accordance to what he has heard about the picture read about it in newspaper and trade paper reviews, and thinks about it himself in terms of local public re-action.

Frank Hill was given "Cimarron." This film, he was sure, would prove one of the biggest ever yet seen in Walla Walla. Everywhere the picture played it had been given unanimous and enthusiastic acclaim. Trade papers, newspaper, radio, prominent authors, playrights, and persons in political and public life lauded it. So Hill decided to give it a campaign to equal—if not surpass—any that had ever been given a picture in Walla Walla, Washington.

Hill knows his public, therefore he seldom wastes any expenditures on exploitation. His first move was to tie-up forty local merchants and gain their assent to his plan which consisted of inaugurating a Friday and a Saturday as "Cimarron Days" during which the local merchants were to offer bargains to the persons of Walla Walla and the surrounding towns. The merchants were duly impressed by Hill's statement that the move, in addition to publicizing the products of the merchants would do much to combat the depression that at the time was recorded as sweeping the country and give to the merchants besides good-will, a volume of business that would perhaps make up for any losses suffered during the dark days when persons rather than spend money, preferred, in the true precautionary manner of country folk "putting it aside for a rainy day."

The merchants got behind the "Cimarron Days" idea wholeheartedly. They gave it plenty of plugging through every possible medium obtainable. Hill used the regular channels that the theatre offered. The local newspapers, always willing to help the showman and the merchants placed its staff of workers on call for any special work that might be found necessary. Advertising was done in profusion.

THEATRE, MERCHANTS AND NEWSPAPERS ALL CASHED IN!

Full page co-operative ads, double truck co-operative ads, individual ads, placards, banners strung across the streets—all informed Walla Walla and the surrounding communities of the special value being offered in the Washington city in conjunction with the showing of "Cimarron." The picture, too, was plentifully plugged, receiving daily space on the front page along with the mention of "Cimarron Days."

Then Hill pulled his crowning stroke. He secured from Dorsey M. Hill, the Mayor of the town, an official proclamation setting aside the two days of the showman's designation as days signifying "a very laudable project." The Mayor's proclamation, published in both Walla Walla newspapers the day before the event broke, stated:

"It has been brought to my attention that the two days, Friday and Saturday of this week, have been set aside as 'Cimarron Days' in Walla Walla and that on these days the merchants of the city are co-operating in a very laudable project to attract buyers and to stimulate and encourage retail trade in general. As outlined to me this plan entails the offering, by the cooperating merchants of certain articles of their best merchandise at greatly reduced prices which should mean a tremendous attraction to the people of surrounding communities and to the people of Walla Walla.

"The event . . . is being held in connection with the showing of the great motion picture, 'Cimarron,' which I believe to be one of the outstanding talking pictures in the history of that industry.

"I wish to state that this project meets with my heartiest approval and I urge the merchants of the City to enter into it with the greatest enthusiasm as I feel that it will act as a great stimulant to the business of the Community as a whole. Also I wish to congratulate the management of the local theatres for its sponsorship of the event and for the wonderful co-operation that the Merchants are giving.

"Through this message, I wish to extend a most hearty welcome to Walla Walla on 'Cimarron Days' to all of the people of this section of the great Inland Empire."

That Hill and the merchants found the campaign a financial success goes without saying.

Front Roy Fashioned For "Aloha" Created Plenty Of Comment

Whenever the opportunity offers itself, George Roy, manager of the State Theatre, Eugene, Ore., turns out some ace displays on the current production playing his house. He is well versed in showmanship and more than give effective treatment to whatever picture he happens to plug.

Not so long ago, Roy played "Aloha," Tiffany's new south sea drama, and decided to give the picture "that little touch." The result of the display work he turned out can be seen in the photos we are showing. The top photo shows the knockout flash obtained by cutting out scenes from the posters and making of them compoboard cut-outs. At night two concealed spots played on both cut-outs, which were visible for many blocks from the theatre. We'd also like to direct your attention to the streamers placed under the marquee. They were of varied colors and did much to enhance the eye-arresting quality of the display.

The other photo gives a close-up of the front proper. Note how the banner is bordered with light and plugging the picture. The price rate of the theatre can be seen on either side. All of Roy's frames are studded with electric lights and when the poster paper is especially effective, as happens so to be in this case, the highlights are brought out in startling relief. You will also notice in the photo that Roy has dressed his ushers in costume for the picture. They have to go inside now and work, so we'll have to sign off. Thanks, girls.

Listen, George, we understand that you are doing considerable work on your displays of late. How about giving us some more? And include your photo with the next contribution.

That other showmen, too, will find it a boon to boosting box-office business is naturally deducible. All really necessary to make of a campaign, such as Hill used, a success is that the showman put everything he has into it. The merchants, having a leader, will be more than glad to do their part.

We are not going to say that if you haven't yet played "Cimarron," line up your campaign now so that you'll be set when you do play the picture. That is neither our purpose nor our policy. Our main object in presenting to you Frank Hill's campaign on "Cimarron" is to show you that when the goods arrive in the form of educational, thrilling and entertaining ways and means to sell them so that not only motion pictures a showman will always find will the house benefit pecuniarily, but institutionally as well.

The sagacity of Dorsay Hill, the Mayor, was adequate to easily discern the motive of the theatre and the business men; hence he was more than willing to personally endorse the film. All of this tends towards betterment of production and a still greater scope for the "infant industry," the motion picture.

Movie Fan Magazine!

Fashioned more along the lines of a high class Movie Magazine than a house organ, the Movie Fan Magazine made its initial appearance under date of March 27th, as the mouthpiece of the Keith's Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa.

From cover to cover this interesting little booklet shows every indication of being turned out by men who understand, not only the public trend of mind, but the many angles of show-business as well.

Both Ed Corcoran and Jerry Crowley, editor and managing editor, respectively, deserve a lot of credit for the magazine they have produced and should there be any live-wire showmen who would like to find the nucleous for something similar, we doubt whether Corcoran or Crowley would object to sending them a copy. Just address your request to either of these gentlemen at 507 Keith Theatre Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

We shall be looking forward to future issues of this unusual magazine.

Krim's Heralds Are Business Builders; Can You Use Them?

When Sol Krim, manager of the Macomb Theatre in Mount Clemens, Mich., sets out to bring kiddie business to his theatre he certainly goes after it with a vengeance.

We are presenting here a herald showing what he did on Valentine's Day when he decided to give a party to the kids of the town. A bag of candy was given to every kid and a hundred of them were given a special treat in form of an ice cream soda. In addition, he arranged a screen program that he was certain would delight them. It is not only on holidays such as Valentine's Day that he hands out candy and sodas. Through a tie-up he engineered he manages to give away every week a bag of candy and a hundred ice cream sodas. And make believe it doesn't mean anything to the kids! They are lined up for the show an hour or so before opening time.

Krim tells us that heralds he uses weekly are more than valuable to him. In view of the fact that they are addressed just for them, the kids pay especial attention. There is one point that we'd like to bring out here, though. Krim makes it a point to try and spot Saturday pictures that will be of appeal to both young and old. If he has a double feature, he makes sure that one film is at least light, so that the kids will enjoy it. This is a most valuable point to be taken into consideration when using double features. Perhaps the heralds will mean lots for your business, too. Give the idea a little consideration and if you think it has a chance in your town don't hesitate to shoot the works.

Krim offers us another suggestion for business building for showmen located in towns where stores are kept open until 10 o'clock on Saturday nights. He informs us that for the past two months he has been giving midnight shows on Saturday and finds them to be very profitable, as the only expense he incurs is that of operator and electricity. What do you think of the idea? Perhaps it's just what you've been looking for. We want to thank Krim for passing this along to us and we hope that we'll hear from him again in the very near future, as we are sure that his suggestions are more than well received by his fellow showmen and members of the Managers' Round Table Club.

Stollery Displays Lots Of Activity At Fox San Mateo

Just to give you some idea of how the showmen of the Fox West Coast Theatres work to sell their attractions, we have obtained a copy of the publicity report sent in by Edward Stollery for a week's work on his pictures. Stollery, as a number of showmen know, handled the Fox San Mateo Theatre, San Mateo, Cal. And here's his way of handling it.

The pictures he was selling at the time were, "Billy the Kid;" "Her Man;" "Life of the Party," and "Oh, Sailor Behave." To sell these films Stollery used three one sheets on all pictures, one three sheet on all pictures, two window displays on "Billy the Kid," and "Life of the Party," 10,000 programs with the week's pictures, 5,000 of which were distributed in Burling and 4,032 through the mailing list, and the rest at the theatre, signs atop the marquee plugged, "Oh Sailor Behave," newspaper ads, trailers, complete lobby displays, and publicity.

The ads used by Stollery were composed of exchange mats, around which type was cleverly set. To stimulate interest in the theatre and in the ads, Stollery frequently runs tie-ups with the local newspaper and its business directory places the name of a local resident. The resident, upon identifying himself or herself is given two tickets to the theatre. Stollery also received additional publicity on a local review planned for presentation by the Elks at the theatre the following week. The house was sold out in advance for those evenings.

That's all. But it's enough for one week of showselling, isn't it? Just goes to prove that the California air must have something to it to make all of the circuit's showmen turn out ace work. Let's hear from you on the subject, Ed.

Tie-Up With Railroad Gave Display In Lobby To Buehrig

If you had a lobby display such as we are showing, wouldn't you expect it to command attention? That's just what happened when A. H. Buehrig, Jr., manager of Loew's Century Theatre in Baltimore, Md., used the display to help give an advance plug to "Fighting Caravans."

The display depicted the advance in transportation from the time of the covered wagon right up to today's de luxe passenger airplanes. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company furnished Buehrig with a miniature of "Tom Thumb," the first American built locomotive. The company also supplied a miniature of a modern locomotive.

A tieup with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was productive of a miniature transcontinental plane called "The City of Columbus," (Ohio) so designated because it connects New York with California via the air route. From a local company, Buehrig obtained a miniature covered wagon and a miniature stage coach. The background of the display was very attractive and the entire display was spotted from a ceiling chandlier.

The display was so attractive that the advertising manager of the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. requested a picture of the display for their monthly magazine, distributed to all B. & O. employees. In addition to the break on the photo, Buehrig also grabbed off some institutional advertising for his theatre in a magazine going to 17,000 B. & O. employees in Baltimore and nearby towns.

Another great break was the placing, by Buehrig, in the lobby of the railroad's Baltimore building (holding over 5,000 persons) of a lobby card which carried the name of the picture and also stressed the point that employees of the B. & O. should not fail to see the transportation show in the lobby. Well, to make the story short, as a result of Buehrig's work the picture "Fighting Caravans" did a good business, the extra few dollars being gladly received, and this, added to the goodwill and publicity received, more than satisfied Buehrig. As who wouldn't be satisfied? How about some more very soon, "A. H.?"

McKay And Wilson Featured Newsheet To Great Advantage

A theatre program that makes a considerable hit with the theatre going public of Rutland, Vt., is the one turned out at the Publix Strand Theatre by T. W. McKay, manager and J. H. Wilson, assistant.

This copy that we have on hand is one used the week "Scandal Sheet" played the theatre. The showmen, deciding that the picture merited plenty of plugging, put a head on their tabloid style house organ "Scandal Sheet." The front page carried a number of stories and pictures on the film, besides a box announcing the playdates of the film. The two inner pages of the newspaper theatre organ contained ads, jokes, and local items; as well as a contest and news items from Hollywood. The last page carries intimate stories on the stars, and also ads plugging products of local merchants.

The program newspaper is printed in black and white and measures 9½ by 12½ inches. It is well made up and printed on good stock paper. The ads pay for the printing of the sheet. We want to thank McKay and Wilson for passing this along.

Both Camp'gns Used By Hucknall Clicked For Lots Of Publicity

Two in a row was what John W. Hucknall, manager of the National Theatre in Stockton, Cal., had when he played "Cimarron" and followed it up with "Abraham Lincoln." At this writing, we are not going to launch into a description of every phase of his campaign. Rather, we are just going to pass along, a few words on a couple of stunts that proved beneficial to him.

One stunt of especial value was used on "Cimarron." A number of the local dealers co-operated and placed copy relating to the picture in their ads. Another merchant even gave a description of the days of the "Cimarron" to the local newspaper. The paper itself co-operated by running a streamer head on the page. The ads for the picture were also well made up, packing a punch that sold.

For the selling of "Abraham Lincoln," an essay contest of the Emancipator, open to everybody, attracted a great deal of attention from the local public. Prizes were given to adults, high school and grammar school students, and any small child wishing to express his or herself in a few words. Fifty words was the limit for the essay from any participant. The stunt certainly clicked. Indeed, we might say that it was one of the most outstanding ones in the entire campaign. As in "Cimarron," the ads on "Abraham Lincoln" were so directed as to sell the picture as a screen achievement. Hucknall succeeded. Let's have some more, John.

Phone Operator Told Town About Picture Lamb Was Featuring

A novel telephone exploitation stunt was included by Russell Lamb, manager of the Fisher Theatre, Danville, Ill., in the campaign he used to help make a success of his showing of Metro-Goldwyn-production, "Inspiration," with the glamorous Greta Garbo.

Lamb used a telephone operator for special service in calling up a list of telephone subscribers in Danville and vicinity. She told them that "The management of the Fisher theatre had just previewed the latest Greta Garbo picture, 'Inspiration,' and the tremendous import of the entertainment value of this great star and picture, inspired them with the idea that it would be advisable to notify their patrons immediately that due to the importance of other bookings the picture could only be held for three days."

In addition to this Lamb personally visited over eighteen merchants and obtained their consent to tie-ups with strong promotional value of the star and the picture, by allowing appropriate displays combined with their merchandise to be placed in their windows. There were four dry goods stores, two music stores, two department stores, seven drug stores, three flower stores, and two United Cigar stores who were furnished with special window cards upon which special stills from the picture were mounted, along with appropriate theatre and tie-up copy.

This is typical of Lamb's activity, as those of you who have followed his showselling know. We hope that we'll hear some more about his work in the near future. What do you say, Russell?

Pierre Boulogne Is A Close Student Of Neighborhood Public

"Give them novelty in a herald," shouts Pierre Boulogne, "and they'll come into the theatre."

And Pierre should know, for he is the manager of the Norva Theatre in Norfolk, Va., and he has so thoroughly studied his local conditions that he is enabled at will to use just the type of stunt that will go over to good results. This was seen when he played "The Royal Family of Broadway," a satirical film that, in Boulogne's estimation warranted selling of an out of the ordinary calibre.

Boulogne finally decided to use the personal letter gag as one of his campaign features. The result was that a well composed letter was despatched to a select mailing list—comprising members of the Women's Club; civic clubs, professional women's club; all school teachers, and to the mailing list of the local Little Theatre. The letter proved to be of value just as Boulogne estimated. The result: a few additional dollars were drawn to the box-office that might not otherwise have found their way there.

For a special herald, Boulogne used the one supplied by the exchange. This herald is in the form of a miniature tabloid, based on New York's famous index sheets. The herald is well made up carrying pictures on front and back pages, with appropriate captions accompanying the photos. 5,000 of these heralds were distributed on busses and street cars between the hours of five and seven P. M., it being Boulogne's idea to hand them out at the dinner time in order that the homegoing workers would carry them right into the houses. He succeeded. And so did the rest of the campaign.

Cowan Contacted A Department Store; Plenty Of Ad Space

At his last contribution as publicity director for the Century Circuit in Brooklyn, N. Y. and Long Island, N. Y., Larry Cowan, resigned, certainly engineered a marvelous tie-up with one of the foremost department stores in Brooklyn.

While perusing the morning paper, Cowan read an ad to the effect that Loeser's, long a conservative store, had finally succumbed to public appeal and opened a basement store. Cowan reached for his hat (unless he already had it on his head, as is customary with some press agents) and hotfooted it to the department store. A short conference with the advertising manager and an excellent tie-up was set.

To the patrons of the Century Circuit Theatre Loeser's agreed to give on a certain night, merchandise orders totalling one hundred dollars. To properly put across the stunt they made up two hundred thousand coupon tickets, paid $50 to a theatre for a trailer to run on the various screens, and also included the stunt and theatre names in all of their advertising. And if you know what it costs to run ads in New York and Brooklyn papers, you'll easily see the value of Cowan's tie-up.

Well, Larry, we'll say that was some present you handed to the Century Citrcuit, and also to the patrons of its houses. We want to wish you lots of luck on your new assignment (wherever it is) and hope to hear from you again.

Join This Army of Real Showmen!

G. N. TURNER manages the Family Theatre in Pine City, Minn. Mr. Turner is well-known in his town and in turn knows his town very well. Which is certainly an advantage to his show selling. Knowing his local public enables him to engineer only such stunts as he is sure will click for him. And since he is active in his town, we hope that he will transfer some of that activity to the Club pages. What do you say, "G. N?"

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DEWEY M. GRAY manages the Pine Lawn Theatre in Pine Lawn, Mo. In his town, Dewey is very active, and his showselling is right on the line. We hope that he will be a showman whose name will appear often on our pages. By the way, Dewey, you might also include a photo of yourself with your first contribution.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ANGELO FISHER manages the Empire Theatre in Detroit, Mich. He is the most recent showman from that town to sign on the dotted line and become a member of the Round Table Club. And it brings us that much closer to the 100 per cent Round Table quota we are shooting at. Oke, Angelo, we want to welcome you into the Club, and we hope that we'll be hearing from you often.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALEXANDER SULLIVAN is the manager of the Recreations Theatre in Stellenbosch, South Africa. Though located in the country, Mr. Sullivan's house is nevertheless situated in a busy spot. It's a big University center. We are sure that if he can find time to sit down and drop us a line or two, he will provide us with some interesting material on his methods of show selling. How about it, Mr. Sullivan, give us some information on the subject, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LESLIE O. McEACHERN is the manager of the Chic Theatre in Milo, Me. His is the most recent membership application to be received from the live-wire Maine state. In the event that Leslie intends to keep right out front with the rest of the showmen from his territory—as we think he does—he will have to do some fast stepping. And as your first contribution, Leslie, let's have a photo and a little dope on yourself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. E. NEWELL manages the Lido Theatre in Demopolis, Alabama. We have been down in Mr. Newell's territory before, but only in the larger cities, and then we were in a hurry. However, "J. E.," you can drop us a line or two and give us the lowdown on the show situation in your section and how you sell your shows. Include your photo, too.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM PENDER is the assistant manager of the Bexley Theatre in Dover, Ohio. He received his present position through a promotion, so we feel that he must be an observing showman. Well, Bill, just keep your eye on the way Mr. Burton sells his shows and we are sure that under his tutelage you'll pick up enough knowledge to let you some day handle a house of your own.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE H. CLARKE manages the Lincoln Theatre in Washington, D. C. for the Lichtman Theatres. Like the other showman on his circuit, Clarke is active and endeavors to sell his shows in the best possible manner, and tries to keep his sixteen hundred seat house filled as often as possible. Which, you will agree, is all that anyone can ask. How about it, George?

JOSEPH PHELPS manages the Patchogue Theatre in Patchogue, Long Island, N. Y., and from what we have already seen of his work, we learn that he is an alert showman, whose specialty lies in creating novel lobby displays. We will endeavor to show some of his work in a future issue of the Club pages. In the meantime, Joe, let's hear some more from you. And you might also include your photo in your next contribution.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DAVID GOERLITZ is the assistant manager of the York Theatre, Elmhurst, Ill. He assists Stuart De Lang in the management of the house. Goerlitz has had a bit of experience so far in the show game, and we are sure that what he picks up under the tutelage of Mr. De Lang will more than help him towards achieving what he hopes for—a position as manager. Keep us posted David so that we can see how you are progressing.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOSEPH N. SCHWARTZWALDER is the City Manager of the Fox Strand, Jefferson, and Palace Theatre in Auburn, New York. His headquarters is at the Strand. Well, it looks as though this showman is plenty busy with so many houses to take care of, but as he is also more than active, we believe that he will find time to sit down and drop us a line regarding his work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY H. GOLDSMITH manages the Granada Theatre in Buffalo, New York, for the Schine Circuit. The town, as many showmen know, permits of some live-wire showselling; and the past showselling activities of various showmen in the city have certainly been corkers. How about you, Harry? What are you doing to put your house across? Give us the lowdown so that we can pass it along. Oke?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY COHEN is the manager of the Warner Bros. Forum Theatre in Los Angeles, Cal. Being a member of Moe Silver's division, Harry is immediately tagged active; for it seems to us that practically all of these Warner West Coast men are on the go every minute. And we don't ask you to take our word for it: consult the back files of the Managers' Round Table Club. Welcome, Harry. And listen. how about a photo of yourself with your first contribution?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED C. CROW, manager of Warner Bros. Theatre in San Pedro, Cal., comes to the Club proposed for membership by Wallace Butler, our Regional Chairman for the district. Crow, like Butler, is a member of Moe Silver's go-getting division of showmen. That puts you in the active fold, Fred. And so we want to see some of your work real soon.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALFRED C. POWERS is the assistant manager of the Ideal Theatre, in New York City. The Ideal is located right off Times Square, so you see that the theatre caters not only to a neighborhood crowd, but to a Broadway crowd as well. Which means that some high powered showselling must be used. Let's know what you are doing to help the manager sell shows, Alfred.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MARTY SCHWARTZ is the manager of Warner Brothers' Huntington Park Theatre in Hungtington Park, Cal. And make believe that Marty doesn't know how to sell his shows! He's one of the live-wires from Moe Silver's division, too; and comes to us proposed for membership by Regional Chairman, Wally Butler.

ALEXANDER GOTTLIEB is the publicity director for the Paramount Theatre, on Times Square, in New York City. We have seen lots of his work, so we know that he is right there when it comes to selling shows. We extend him a welcome into the Club and we hope that he will prove an active contributor as we are sure that his work will provide interesting and profitable reading for the followers and members of the Club pages, who are always interested in seeing how things are done in the Big Town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANKLIN J. McABEE is the manager of the Costello Theatre, on the Ochs Circuit, in New York City. Mr. AcAbee comes to the Club proposed for membership by Martin Messinger, himself a club member and an active contributor. With Martin proposing you, Franklin, that's all we need right now. However, we'd like a photo of yourself with your next contribution, so that we can give you an introduction. Oke?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES O. CLARK of the Maryland Theatre in Hagerstown, Md., is proposed for membership in the Managers' Round Table Club by Frank Boucher, district manager for Warners. When Frank proposes a showman, Charley, we know that the man he proposes is a showman. Which means that we expect you to be an active contributor to the Club pages. You know, the Maryland holds quite a record for harboring live-wire showmanship. Welcome into the Club. And listen, you might include a photo of yourself with your next contribution.

Thomas A. Phelan

Actor, bandmaster, and showman, Thomas A. (Tommy) Phelan, entered the show game as an actor with the Pianophiend Minstrels during the season of 1910-1911. After that season, he toured with his own act for a time. Then he accepted a position as a musical leader with the Reade Circuit in New Jersey, where he had established a residence. Tommy Phelan's showman career then started.

For a number of years Phelan remained as a leader with the Reade Circuit, though being promoted in the meantime to the post of musical director. Three years ago, when things started to buzz with the advent of sound pictures, Phelan transferred his activities to the front of the house, securing a position as manager of two houses in Long Branch, N. J. When the Reade Circuit sold out to Publix, Phelan was retained, and today can be found selling shows at the Strand in Long Branch.

And he certainly sells them, too! He knows the town inside out and upside down. He is well known also, and has many friends among the residents and merchants, and these contacts more than help him in putting across his shows. Phelan has worked for but two circuits, Walter Reade and Publix. The houses he has worked in are the Strand in Long Branch and the Broadway, now named New Paramount. He entered the show business in 1910, automatically through his musical career.

Born in Worcester, Mass., Phelan was educated in the Public and High Schools of Worcester and had musical training at the Boston (Mass.) Conservatory of Music. His lodge affiliations number one: the Long Branch Lodge 742 B.P.O.E. Phelan is married and has one child. The show business still holds his interest and he hopes to remain in it and taking stock again of the work he has turned out since he has been in the game. Is there any reason why he shouldn't?

Frank E. Drachman

Drachman is a name well known in Tucson, Arizona. It was founded and established by Mr. Drachman, father of Frank E., over 25 years ago. Frank Drachman is a native son, having been born in Tucson, atended its grade and high schools, and then the University of Arizona.

Drachman entered the show business at the age of ten. It was inevitable, in view of his parent's record, that he should do so. He likes the business, and that's what gave him the first incentive that led to his today being a manager. When but ten, Frank distributed heralds for his father. Then, when old enough to be an usher, Frank received that assignment. From the usher's berth he was shifted to a doorman's uniform, and after a while he received the coveted promotion. Today, he manages the Opera House in Tucson for Publix, and he manages it with a capital "M".

That he knows the town, its likes and its dislikes, goes without saying. The same is equally true of the town's regard for Frank. Nearly everyone in town knows the Drachman family (there's Roy, too, who also handles a house in the city). Frank has worked for the Richards and Nace Circuit and Publix. He has managed only one house, the Opera House, and he has held the job for the last five years—the post having been given to him in 1926. He is married and has one child, a boy. The Elks and the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity constitute his lodge affiliations. Because he entered the show game with a liking for it, he is sure that he would again choose the same profession if offered an opportunity. And he doesn't ever expect to leave the show game, for any other profession.

Indeed, he wouldn't care to know anything other than the show game, even if 17 or 18 different professions were open to him.

Floyd G. Nutting

The banking business began to prove uninteresting for Floyd Nutting, so he decided to leave it—after he had been in it four years! He figured that counting money for a bank day in and day out was no sort of business for a man with an imagination and a healthful constitution, that demanded he exercise in some other manner than passing his fingers over rolls of bills and using up bottles of ink one after the other. He wanted a business that would provide him with more life, more color, more zest, more glamour. He finally decided that the show business was the thing. And so at the age of 21 he entered the field.

Nutting started in as an assistant manager in Minot, N. Dak. He was sure that he had picked the right profession, for it wasn't long before he received a promotion and a transfer. The promotion was to the post of house manager in a theatre in Rochester, Minn. He worked like blazes on this job. A year later he received another and greater promotion. The post of city manager of the Rochester theatres was assigned to him. He handled the job for two years, and then was shifted to Minot, North Dakota.

To-day, Nutting is handling the State in Minot. He is well known in the town, and well liked. He is a member of the local Rotary Club—his only lodge affiliation, by the way. Nutting was born in Minneapolis, Minn., and was educated in the city's grade school, high school and college. He is married. The circuits that he has worked for are Finklestein and Rubin and the Publix organization, the last named being his present connection. He likes the show game, which is why he entered it, and he hopes to stay in the business for many more years.

He is sure to be counted in on every kind of civic activity that goes on, and he is a familiar figure in all of the town's doings such as anniversary celebrations, special weeks, etc.

Joseph E. Isaac

He left the show business once, but now he's back again. Which always happens with showmen, it seems to us. They leave—for good they say—then first thing you know, they are back again. Isaac entered the show game because he liked it. And so in 1914 he was connected with the Matoaka Theatre, Matoaka, W. Va.

This was before the World War. Isaac enlisted, and after the war—in 1919 to be exact—he took over the Strand Theatre in Norton, Va., later acquiring the Lyric Theatre in the same town. He managed both houses for three and one-half years, at the conclusion of which time he decided to leave the show business. He sold out both houses, and entered into the dry goods business. For two years he remained in that game. But, as was said before, the show business called him. And out of the dry goods game he went. To-day you'll find Isaac at the Cumberland Theatre in Cumberland, Ky., where he is selling shows in a manner that proves he knows what the game is all about. He studied hard to learn the show game, and that may perhaps account for why he never stays out of it for very long. In fact, he might leave it many more times, but he's sure that he'll be back again.

Isaac was born in Syria, came to America, and at the age of 16 entered the show business. He was educated in the Norton, Va., high school and the Roanoke Business College in Roanoke, Va. He is married and has three children, all boys. His lodge affiliations are many: the Masons, Odd Fellows, Moose, Woodmen, American Legion, Cumberland Chamber of Commerce (he served for two years as City Clerk); and the Kentucky National Guard (he's a captain). He has never worked for a circuit; always the independent houses. And he has mostly owned the houses he has worked at.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

IDA GROVE, IA.

DEAR HERALD:

It is generally believed that the best way to build up attendance at theatres is to build a habit—to get people in the habit of attending—but our theory is that to build a desire is much more preferable and more lasting. It is easy to break a habit, but hard to do away with a desire.

We once had a girl who had a habit of sending us home at 10 o'clock but we broke her of that habit by taking her all-day suckers. We had another girl who had a desire that we stay until 12, and that's the girl who got our business, so we believe in "desires" rather than "habits." The lines that form in front of theatres are formed because of a desire to see the show and not because of the habit of attending.

Any kind of a show will draw a certain number of people because of the habit of attending, but if you want to fill your house you must offer something that will create a desire in the minds of the masses to see what you are offering. If the attendance all depended upon habit there would be no incentive to make such pictures as "COMMON CLAY," "HIGH SOCIETY BLUES" and "CIMARRON" and pictures of that type. Those kind of pictures don't form habits, they form desires. "Get the habit" is a common expression, but "create a desire" has got it beat a mile. We've got a habit of trolling for bass and pike when we have the opportunity but if it wasn't for the desire to feel the tug on the reel we would as soon play mumble-peg or ping pong as to whip a creek for trout or troll for muskies.

Uncle Leazer Biggs said to Aunt Polly, "Polly, this is Thursday, and you know I have a habit of going to town every Thursday," and Aunt Polly said, "Yeah, but I have a desire that you get out and spade up that garden today," and the desire won. Bill Smith was showing "HOLD EVERYTHING" and Tom Jones across the street was showing "FOLLOW THRU." Bill got the people who were in the habit of attending Tom's show because of their desire to see Joe Brown and Winnie Lightner. Habit won't stand up against a desire. To prove this: You have noted that we have a habit of using a lot of space to say nothing, and your desire to use violence impells us to drop the matter right here. Therefore, desire wins.

Bouquets for Winnie and Joe

Everytime we see Winnie Lightner play we are strengthened in our belief that the movies have not been invented in vain. We saw her and Joe Brown last night in "SIT TIGHT" and we are convinced, more than ever, that this pair register well up to the top with Marie and Polly, which is about all one could say, or ought to say, as to ability. You combine Winnie's personality with Joe's mouth and you've got something to write home about.

If Joe ever gets sick and the doctor wants to examine the contents of his stomach all he will need to do is to open his mouth and the doctor can see clear down into the transverse colon. Joe will never have need for a stomach pump, and Winnie never need rehearse her part. All she needs to do is to get out in front of the camera and just be Winnie.

Last night, accompanied by a couple of friends, we were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Norman of the Empire theatre at Storm Lake to witness "SIT TIGHT" and the picture has been the chief topic of conversation all day. In fact, it is doubtful if we get through talking about it until we see their next picture, and we hereby call upon Winnie to keep us posted as to what it will be and when released, for to miss it would be worse than having to listen to a jazz orchestra, and you know that would kill dandelions. You can reach us Winnie, through the office at 1790 Broadway, New York., and if the boys don't forward your letter to us we'll muss 'em all up.

Marooned in Iowa

We have been marooned here all week on account of snow drifts. Cars are stuck in snow drifts by the dozens along all the highways and it is still snowing. That shows what always happens when we come to Iowa. It is a wonder the legislature don't demand that we leave the state.

The snow is falling thick and fast
And across these prairies sweeps a blast
That would freeze you to the bone.
You can't go East, you can't go West,
No matter if you try your best,
You've got to stay at home.

The guy who wrote sometime ago
That stuff about "The Beautiful Snow"
Was certainly full of prunes.
For this damstuff blows through our clothes
And forms icicles on our nose
And soaks our pantaloons.

Arthur Brisbane, writing of Professor Compton, says the prof. claims that it will take light traveling 186,000 miles per second 600,000,000 years to cross from one side of the known universe to the other, and that the known universe may be but a bit of cosmic dust compared to the solar system.

Hold on there prof., back up a little. You are going pretty strong for us weak minded folks. If you had told us the size of the fish that got away we might have taken some stock in it. What if there are electrons, and bacterium and galactic clusters, and all that kind of stuff, and what if the sun is 95,000,000 miles from the earth, who the dickens wants to go up there anyhow? Joe Brown and Winnie Lightner hain't playin' nuthin' up there. Come on in out of the wet prof. and we will give you something to remove those cobwebs.

A Bath in Virginia

Did you know that the common council of Philadelphia at one time passed an ordinance prohibiting the use of bath tubs between the months of November and March? Yeah, they did. And did you know that Virginia once levied a tax of $30 per year on bath tubs? Yes, sir, that's what they did. And did you know that the Boston council prohibited the use of bath tubs except on instructions of the physicians? That's just what they did, and yet they tell us that the world is growing wiser every day. Hereafter when they boast of having "the blue blood of Virginia" ask them if they have removed that tax on bath tubs yet. And when they boast of having been born in "the cradle of liberty" ask them if they have taken a bath between November and March.

Boston boasts of being "The hub of the Universe," but experience teaches us that the rim travels a darn sight farther than the hub. We hear a lot about the "Pilgrim Fathers" and we presume they were a lot of pretty fine old gazabos, and we are glad they discovered "Plymouth Rock" for it gives us something for which to name our chickens.

When we get back to our home town we are going to have the city council pass an ordinance prohibiting the use of bath tubs between January 1 and December 31. It will save a lot of useless expense, and besides that the Elkhorn river is handy, and that's good enough for anybody.

Boston don't have any use for bath tubs, they go out and ride cod fish around in the bay. That's why we don't like cod fish.

Eighteen states are wanting Fred Burke for murder. That ought to keep him pretty busy for a while, but if they ever let Chicago get hold of him they will parole him on a "vagrancy" charge and that won't interfere with her chief industry at all. We can't see why those 18 states don't mind their own business.

WRIGHT-DECOSTER Introduces

Their New Theatre Speaker and Horn for Sound on Film

No. 109

THROUGH solid months of hard work and the most exacting testing, our Engineering Department have developed a speaker which eliminates the throaty grumblings so often encountered with sound on film, and which brings out the voices clear cut and distinct. This new horn and speaker also gives splendid reproduction of music. While this speaker is made especially for sound on film, only two minutes are required to change it over for disc reproduction. The acoustical adjustment makes it possible for anyone without electrical knowledge to properly adjust the speaker to the theatre. All orders will be filled and shipped in the sequence in which they are received. Shipment cannot be guaranteed short of two to three weeks.

Guarantee

If the Wright-DeCoster No. 109 Theatre Speaker and Horn does not improve your reproduction, we will refund your money.

GUARD AGAINST PROFIT-EATING ACCIDENTS YOU CAN'T FORESEE WITH EXIDE EMERGENCY LIGHTING BATTERIES.

Thunder, lightning, driving rain. Poles down. Power lines snapped. Such a storm can suddenly cut off electric current in your theatre, though it be miles away. Why take this chance? You can be sure of adequate electric current with an Exide Emergency Battery System installed.

DON'T let electric storms strike your pocketbook

FAR AWAY from your theatre, lightning strikes. Poles crash. Power lines come down. Your house is plunged into sudden darkness. Show stops. Refunds are in order. You must dig down in your pocket, if you haven't guarded your theatre against current failure.

This may not happen in a long, long time. But once may be too often. Your power company isn't to blame. It does everything possible to give you dependable service, but it can't prevent interruptions like this any more than you. That's why many theatre owners throughout the United States are installing Exide Emergency Lighting Battery Systems as protection for patrons and profits.

The instant power fails, Exides automatically take over the entire emergency load . . . without a hand touching a switch. You can hold your house. Silent projector can be operated.

Exide Emergency Battery Systems cost very little to operate. We'd like to have one of our technical men call and discuss emergency lighting with you. Or, write for our Emergency Lighting Bulletin. It will interest you. In either event you need not feel obligated.

When Kansas City Gets HOT

Kooler-Aire keeps this theatre COOL

The Oak Park, Kansas City, is kept refreshingly cool all summer by its Kooler-Aire System.

COOL, clean, comfortable fresh air—that's what Jay Means, of the Means Theatres, Kansas City, likes about Kooler-Aire. Mr. Means wrote us recently: "Your Kooler-Aire equipment has been in operation in our theatre for the past two summers.

"Many of our patrons remark about the fresh and wholesome atmosphere and really do appreciate the fact that it is not so cold that they experience a depressed feeling on leaving the theatre and going onto the hot streets.

"All in all we are very well satisfied with our cooling system and take pleasure in recommending it to others."

Kooler-Aire

makes good wherever used. It automatically lowers the temperature as much as 10 or more degrees—provides refreshing comfort in any weather. No recirculation of used air. Complete air changes as often as desired, regulated by Hydraulic Remote Control.

A custom-built job. Every installation is planned and engineered to meet the theatre's individual requirements—and guaranteed by us.

SOLD ON CONVENIENT TERMS

Kooler-Aire may be purchased on liberal time payments. Its low initial cost and small operating cost makes it the least expensive, most profitable cooling system obtainable. Get all the facts.

¶ Remodeling, always a lively phase of construction in the motion picture theatre field because of the industry's rapid growth, seems now to take on a special importance. Inquiry among architects and contractors, as well as among theatre owners, reveals the opinion that this spring and summer will see an unusual amount of revamping and refurbishing of theatres. This concentrated activity may be at least partly ascribed to two current factors—one, enough of a let-down in business to warrant closing for the purpose of remodeling; the other, a decrease in prices.

¶ Important though these factors are in actuating a decision to remodel, they do not include a cause that is really the basic one. It is the fact that the time has arrived when the ordinary type of theatre, as an environment, cannot generally compete. Perhaps that time arrived quite some while ago, and that now showmen are realizing it with a compelling amount of force.

¶Nothing, therefore, could perhaps be so timely for our Spring Buyers Number of 1931 than a varied treatment of theatre remodeling. And it was rather fortunate that the remodeling of the Waldo theatre in Kansas City was completed in time to have the rare lessons it offers pointed out in this issue. A number of architects and theatre men had looked at the old Waldo and commented that nothing worth while could be done with it. Just obsolete—junk it. However, Robert Boller, the noted theatre architect of Kansas City, was offered the chance to see what he could do with it. What he did with it is told elsewhere in this issue, by Mr. Boller himself (Remodeling the Obsolete Theatre), and in the telling, we believe, lies not only a stimulating picture of what can be done to save a theatre property from commercial obliteration, but how it can be done. And the latter is what is aimed at in the other features on remodeling presented in this issue.

¶ Ben Schlanger, New York architect (whose article in our January issue has created so much comment) discusses not the remodeling of an actual theatre, but the problems of remodeling in general, basic things that point to a judicious selection of methods. His article in this issue is the first of two on The Economics of Theatre Remodeling. In the second, to appear in the May 9th issue, he will discuss costs.

¶ We cease being, for the moment, quite so practical in considering Nat Karson's methods of making a new theatre out of an old one. Or perhaps it is just that we think we are not practical, for to their creator, the designs he offers are better fitted by far for the business of showing motion pictures than the type of theatres with which most of us are familiar. Mr. Karson is a young designer and magazine artist residing now in New York City. His father was court designer to the late Czar Nicholas. Born in Zurich, Switzerland, Karson came to this country in time to be educated in American schools—specifically, Chicago, where he later attended the Art Institute. A great deal of his early work was in the motion picture theatre field, and while he now works a more varied field, he still is professionally interested in the theatre and can conceive for it on a basis of an intimate experience. And here, under the title Remodeling the Period Style into the Ultra-Modern, he tells, in both word and drawing, what he thinks should be done about the motion picture theatre's dominant style. (Frankly, we asked him to do this for BETTER THEATRES because we knew his conceptions would be stimulating—certainly provoking.)

¶ Then, of course, to remodel is commonly to re-equip. He who takes up this important phase of remodeling (Modernization of Theatre Equipment) is a veteran, in experience, in the theatre equipment field. Harry M. Paul has been associated with equipment manufacturers and distributors, in both the South and the North, for many years. He is now affiliated with the National Theatre Supply Company.

¶ Space demanding that we hurry on, we must pass a number of features on other subjects to point out that not all of the discussions designed to help those who contemplate remodeling, are in the front part of the book. In the department, Sound in the Theatre, S. K. Wolf offers advice to those who are going to remodel in order to show sound pictures better, as well as those who, remodeling for the sake of appearance, might seek acoustical improvement incidentally (Acoustical Treatment During Remodeling). Mr. Wolf is one of the best informed acoustics engineers, having had the rare opportunity of studying a great number of theatres as head of the acoustics department of Electrical Research Products (Western Electric). Then, too, some things to do, and some things not to do, in remodeling the projection room, are offered by our own F. H. Richardson in his department, Better Projection.

¶ With a discussion addressed to the projectionist (he spoke to the manager in the March 14th issue), Mr. Theatre Sound Engineer (sorry we can't say who he is) concludes his series, Self-Servicing Sound Facilities. As previously explained, the author demanded that his articles appear anonymously on account of associations which otherwise would have prevented him from speaking freely.

¶ Space presses . . . yet a few identifications are necessary. Charles S. Aaronson (A New Loew Neighborhood Theatre) is on the editorial staff of the HERALD, attached to the New York office. . . . Leo T. Parker (The Law of Theatre Construction) is a Cincinnati attorney and a regular contributor of articles on the Theatre and the Law. . . . Lou Jones (Composing the Poster for Effective Color Treatment) is a staff artist connected with the Loew Vendome theatre in Nashville, Tenn. . . . Peter M. Hulsken, who discusses a theatre designed by himself (The Holland: A Dutch Atmospheric Design), is a practicing architect who is familiar to our readers as conductor of the department of architectural counsel, Planning the Theatre.

WE are reminded of a theatre in the northwestern outskirts of Chicago. Although a theatre in or near Chicago probably is not typical of the average motion picture theatre in some respects, it is more typical, so to speak, with regard to competition from elaborate, strongly financed houses. Circuit theatres are everywhere, more of them being in the neighborhoods than in the central business district.

Just a few blocks from the theatre we refer to is one of a large chain's most important houses, while ten minutes away by motor car or transit system is another. Both of these circuit theatres have the pick of the pictures. Yet the independent neighborhood house we are thinking of prospers (even, so it is said, to a greater extent than one of the two circuit rivals).

It would be silly to say that only one thing accounts for this. There are several factors. One is overhead. But another is just as apparent, and that one is the reason we refer to this significant Chicago situation.

Our less resourceful neighborhood friend (less resourceful, that is, financially) keeps his theatre as spic and span and up-to-the-minute in appearance and equipment as his more affluent rivals. Sometimes, one thinks, he even outstrips them a bit. He has to. So he does.

The lesson is not only for independent theatres. It applies to all theatres. Any house that is long to prosper in this age of intensified competition must be able to sell something more than the show on the screen or stage.

This something more is comfort, for one thing. It is functional facility for another.

There must be comfort for more than the body—there must be comfort, so to speak, for the soul as well—beauty of environment. Functional facility demands equipment and accessories that are capable of presenting motion picture entertainment in the highest form to which the art and science of the screen have advanced.

As for the necessity of beautiful appointments in the theatre, showmen are already strongly committed to it. Sometimes, we think, too much so! The real show, after all, is on the screen. The theatre is merely the place to witness it to best advantage. More and more, therefore, designers studying the function of the motion picture theatre with its special relationships to architecture, are adopting the attitude that interiors, particularly the auditorium, should contribute through their very lines and appointments to the focusing of all the patron's interest upon the screen.

Remodeling obviously can reinstate many theatres now hopelessly endeavoring to function according to the demands of today's public, and according to the tremendous advances motion picture entertainment has made the past few years. Other houses fairly new yet have fallen short of the stride taken in this quickened pace. They too need revamping—modernization—now, before the need for more extensive changes later on would increase the cost.

In all too many instances, remodeling is needed to save the theatre as a property. The artist has chosen this grim aspect as his theme. The picture tells the story. But of course we know that the theatre operator in such a crisis, commonly can, by spending relatively a little, save all.

REMODELING THE OBSOLETE THEATRE

A Practical Study Based on an Actual Project

By ROBERT BOLLER

IT IS generally conceded that an obsolete theatre is one which has gradually become unattractive and down-at-the-heel, with possible handicaps of a bleak and uninviting exterior, pre-sound booth and equipment, an antique system of electric wiring and fixtures, faded decorating, worn carpets and furniture, and uncomfortable seating.

These deficiencies are so apparent, and may be so easily remedied, that it is not the object of this discussion to suggest methods by which renovation may be accomplished.

But there is that even greater tragedy of the motion picture theatre world—the theatre which, because of poor planning, is actually out of date when it makes its original bow to the community, and which is impractical and obsolete before the first picture appears upon the new screen.

Such a situation existed, some six years ago, when the Waldo theatre, a neighborhood house located at 75th and Washington Streets, Kansas City, Mo., swung wide its doors to the public. Those doors hung in a low, dark brick front, broken into by an entrance placed at an inconspicuous point on a little traveled side street, some eighty feet from the main artery of traffic through the bustling suburban center. A small electric sign feebly announced the name of the theatre, but unless one took the trouble to walk to the doorway of the new show house, there was no clue as to the attraction offered within. Advertising displays were concealed, rather than revealed, in small unlighted frames at either side of the entrance.

The ticket office, a mere hole in the wall, fronted a narrow foyer which opened into a barnlike hall. Viewed over a four-foot oak standing rail, above which a few limp curtains hung from pipe railings at the ceiling line, the room housing the orchestra seating presented an appearance as interesting as a warehouse interior.

The auditorium proportions were 60x58 feet. No attempt had been made to ornament the bare walls, plain painting having been considered sufficient decoration for the theatre's needs. Ventilation was available through several large factory sash, high up on either side of the room, the panes of which were painted black to prevent the entrance of daylight.

The one floor auditorium had a capacity of 700, but because the lot was extremely short, and the floor not properly inclined, seats on either side of the stage, for some distance back, allowed only a distorted view of the screen. As the theatre grew older, however, intermingled odors from a popcorn stand and unventilated toilet rooms adjoining the bare foyer, hastened the patron to a seat as far forward as his vision would permit.

The Waldo as remodeled. The ornamental vestibule base is continued throughout the lobby.

UNDER THESE inauspicious conditions, it is little wonder that this suburban venture, in spite of brave attempts on the part of various operators, failed not only once, but several times, the house finally remaining dark for a considerable period. Gradually, the regular patrons drifted to other amusement centers, and the theatre generally received a bad name among exhibitors of the city.

At last, through foreclosure, the Waldo passed into the hands of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Stanwood, owners of the land, and at about the same time, the theatre came under the operating control of E. C. Rhoden, now district manager for the Fox Midwest circuit of theatres.

Under Rhoden's management, featuring consistent advertising and better pictures, patronage began to return to the Waldo, till at times the theatre was crowded to capacity. But the final joker in the deck was the fact that approximately 200 seats with poor sight lines and distorted vision repeatedly sent back to the box office indignant patrons, demanding a refund of their admission price.

The situation was frankly discouraging to the ambitious operator, for he found he could not satisfactorily accommodate the crowds that his skillful billing brought to the house. Consultations were held with various chain officials. Several conferences resulted only in a "thumbs down" decision on the proposition of remodeling the theatre, as the building was considered so hopeless that renovation was judged to be simply sending good money after bad.

The matter drifted along uncertainly for months. Business men of the neighborhood began to talk of a new theatre for the district, feeling that the thriving shopping center and beautiful Westmoreland residence addition merited a more representative playhouse than the one which so far had held uncontested rights to local patronage. Various locations were suggested as being desirable sites for the erection of a new motion picture house to compete with the obsolete Waldo.

Under the pressure of public opinion and a worthy desire to benefit their leasehold, the owners and Fox theatre officials, after due consideration for the various problems involved, decided to demolish the entire interior of the old building, and, with only the walls and roof of the original structure remaining, to build a conservative but modern showhouse, which would meet the requirements of efficient theatre operation and also forestall the threatened competition of a new house in the vicinity.

II

Locating the New Entrance

IN THE floor plan of the old building, shown elsewhere, you will note that 75th Street, a busy cross town thoroughfare, was bordered by a series of small shops, all of which were bringing a substantial return at the time the remodeling of the theatre was undertaken, as was a small apartment on the second floor of the corner store. The entire business block and theatre property was owned by the Stanwoods, as mentioned above.

The new foyer. The exit doors at right were formerly the main entrance doors.

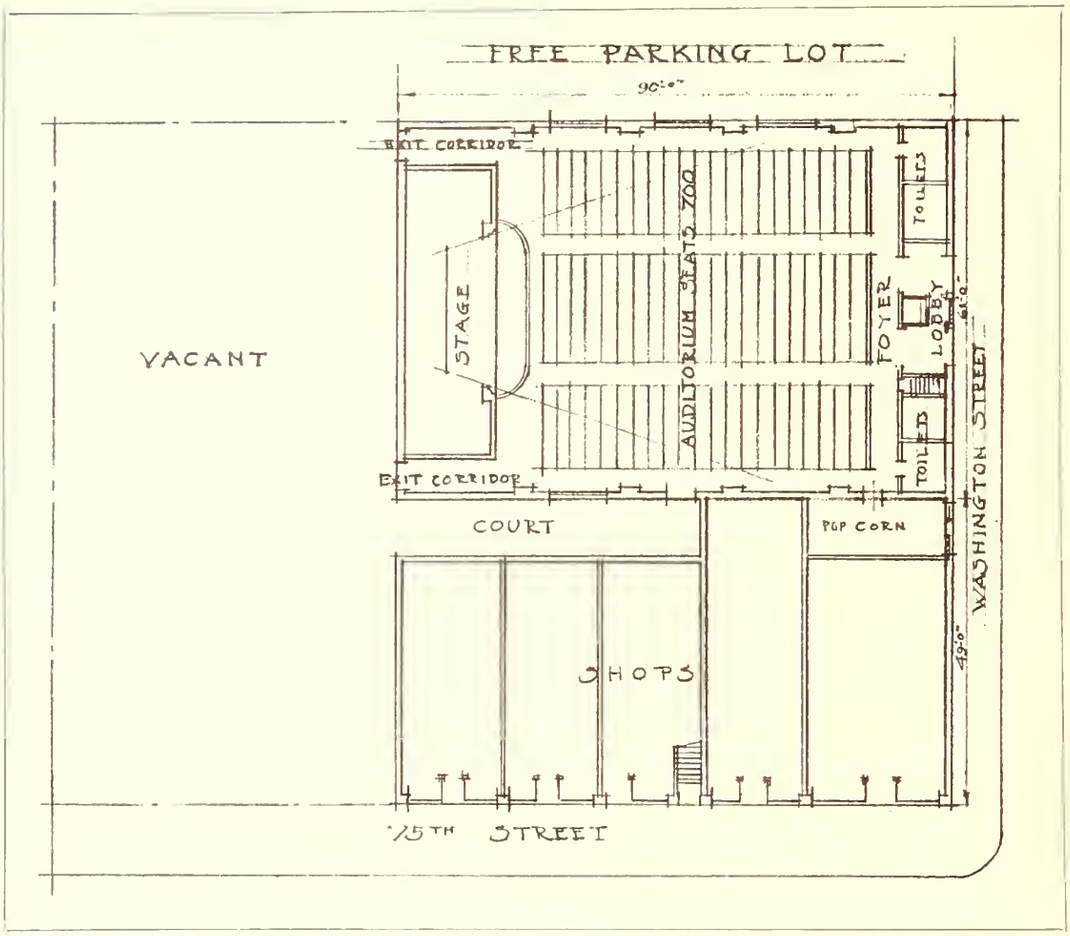
Early conferences between the owners, Fox officials, and the architect determined that the corner store, although commanding a good rental, should be sacrificed in the replanning of the theatre, to make available, through a box office located on a busy street, a larger return in dollars and cents than was possible under the existing shop lease. Accordingly, a vestibule and lobby, twenty-two feet in width, were arranged on 75th Street in this space.

The brick fronts of the existing commercial block and the old theatre were slightly built up on both street frontages, with offsets at different points to give the effect of height. The new exteriors received an inexpensive treatment of light buff stucco, with ornaments in warm shades of red brick and terra cotta along the new skyline.

Over the newly created 75th Street entrance a pyramidical feature in black and gold terra cotta added a sophisticated note to the front, above an imposing marquee. Small and inconspicuous casement windows were worked into the terra cotta detail, so that the new ornamentation in no way interfered with the light needed in the second floor apartment.

Large, well lighted display cases were placed on either side of the entrance to tell their postered story to a passing world, and changeable letter signs in the marquee facing added their bit of ballyhoo for the current attraction.

The old entrance on Washington Street was closed in with a series of curtained glass doors, and left to serve as an exit-way during crowded performances. The former marquee was also left in place as a slight protection from the weather for movie fans departing through these doors.



In doing over the two street fronts, light buff stucco was chosen as the base material because it not only is inexpensive and easy to apply, but because it also offers one of the best possible mediums for reflecting various forms of flood and colored night lighting.

In remodeling an old house, or in building a new theatre it should be borne in mind that dark materials, if used to excess, will absorb the color and light which should be reflected by the front. Many dark and dingy entrances have been rendered more cheerful and inviting by a coat of light stucco and minor alterations to the exterior.

The importance of an attractive exterior for the motion picture theatre can hardly be over-emphasized. Light, color, warmth and hospitality always attract and cheer the heart of the passerby. For the small house, depending on two evening shows, with matinees on Saturday and

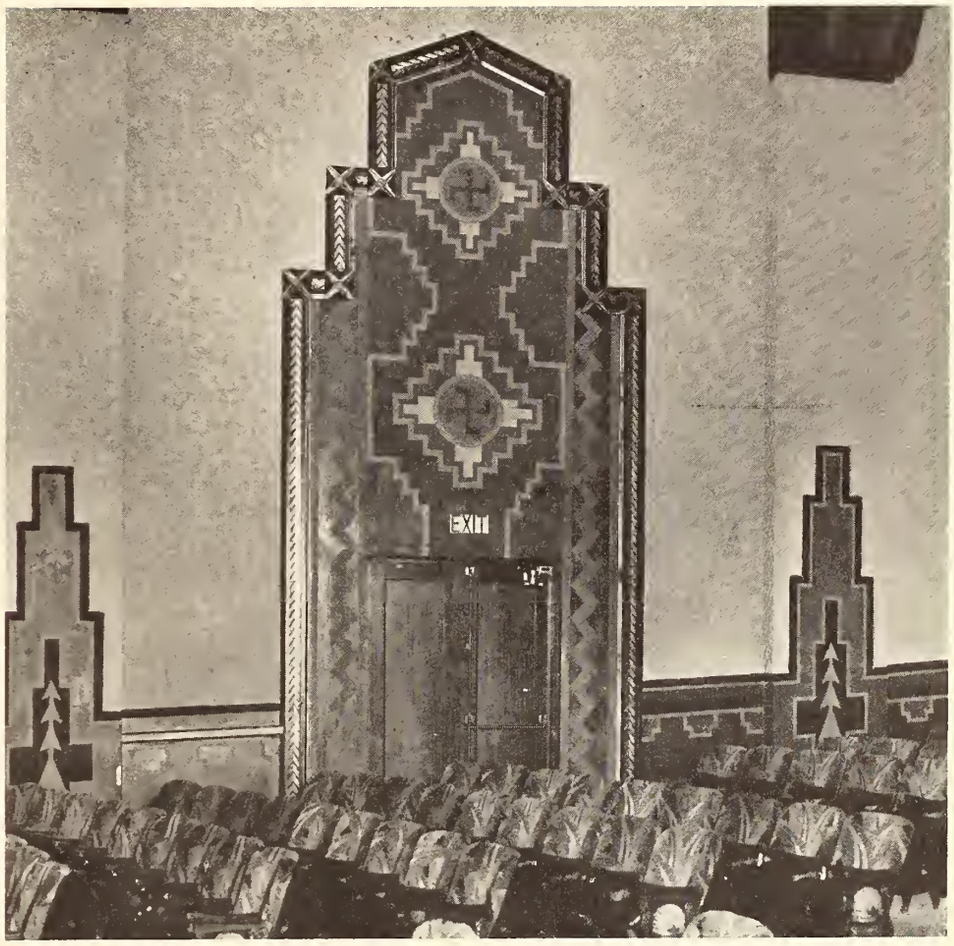
Sunday only (as is the case at the Waldo), a properly lighted and well designed front is the best possible advertisement, and should be one of the first requirements listed for both the new theatre and the remodeled showhouse.



Another small item, which seems almost too trivial for mention in connection with the street end of the theatre building, is the desirability of rubber or link mats recessed in the vestibule or lobby floor. In rainy or freezing weather these minor features reduce the wear and tear on carpets and furniture in the theatre interior, by removing mud and snow from the patrons' footgear, and soon pay for themselves in eliminating a great amount of additional janitor service during the stormy season. In remodeling the Waldo, perforated rubber mats were placed in the vestibule floor, located at either side of the box office.

III

The Lobby

THE REMODELED 75th Street front of the Waldo breaks back into an open vestibule twelve feet in depth. A series of doors, connected to each side of an ornamental plaster and tile box office, separates this entranceway from a roomy lobby. The outer doors of the old house opened directly into the foyer, and cold drafts of air from the street swept onto the shivering audience each time a patron entered or departed. In the remodeled plan, the new vestibule doors, shutting in a lobby heated with direct steam radiation, eliminate all wintry drafts, the tempered air insuring the comfort of patrons in foyer and auditorium.

When the old Waldo theatre occasionally had an overflow crowd, the foyer provided a very limited space in which to hold late comers, and practically all patient waiters had to remain in the street. The roomy lobby of the revamped building, made possible by the conversion of the corner store into theatre property, will comfortably house 500 standees awaiting the second show, without in any way interfering with the exiting of departing patrons at any time.

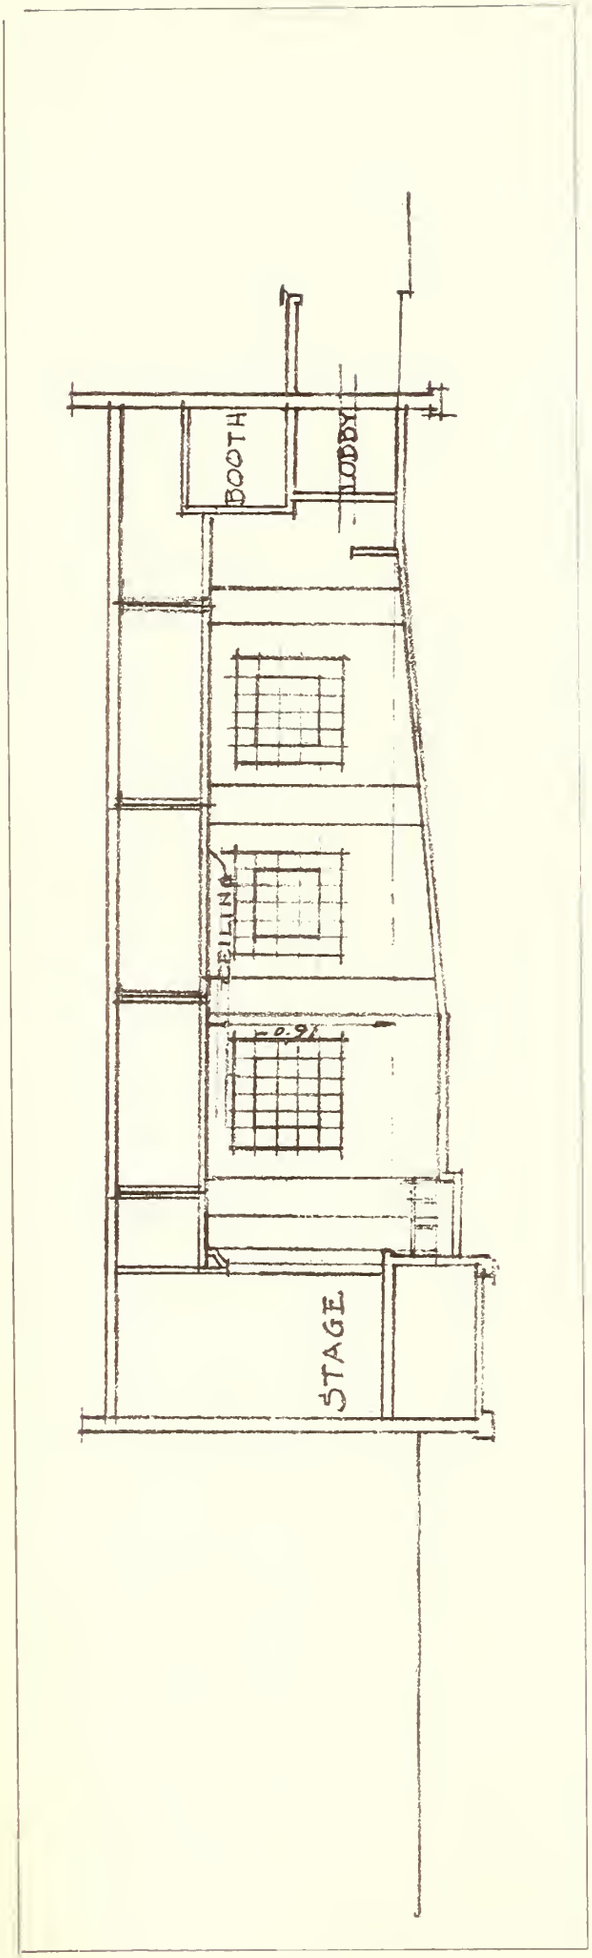
Detail of an exit feature, showing Indian signs used in the decorating scheme.

As he awaits the removal of the "Standing Room Only" sign, the movie-goer may amuse himself by looking at lobby walls of jade green texture, high lighted with golden bronze; at gay ornamental plaster and tile base, cheerful with red, blue, yellow and green tones; at a warm terrazzo floor of buff, red and black; or richly coffered ceiling of bronzed ornamental work. Furnished with glowing torcheres and sightly display frames featuring coming attractions, it is the sort of lobby in which one doesn't mind making a short wait for the show.

Between the lobby and foyer a group of underwriters label, hollow metal doors, with fusible arms, stand ready to fall shut and to form a formidable barrier in case of fire in either the theatre or adjoining commercial building. By forming a fire wall between the two structures, this feature permits a considerable reduction in the insurance rates of both buildings. Sufficient existing facilities for all emergencies are provided in other portions of the theatre proper.

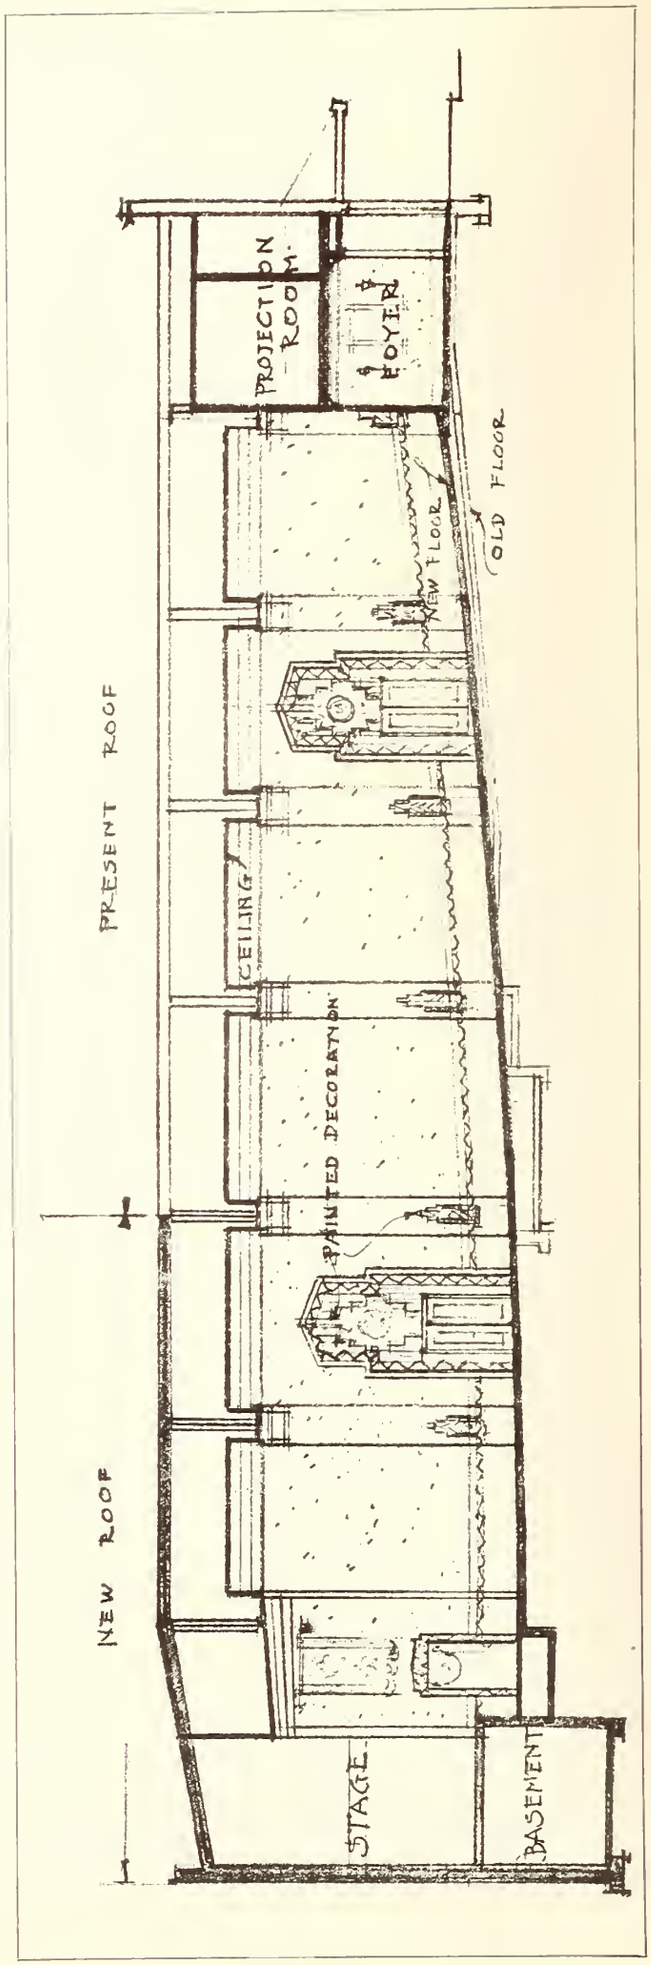
IV

The Foyer



ENTERING the new foyer, 13 feet in width and extending the full width of the old theatre building, one recollects that the former foyer was crowded into a five-foot space between the old street front and rear of auditorium. The old-fashioned standing rail was done away with in the renovating process, and in its place was substituted a closed wall separating foyer and auditorium.

Even before the talking picture made silence in the auditorium imperative, operators found that the solid partition did away with the danger of chilling drafts and confusion caused by entering patrons, both of which the open standing rail allowed to filter directly into the orchestra seating.



Shut away from the rest of the theatre by the lobby on the one hand and a closed wall on the auditorium side, the foyer of the small theatre has a psychological purpose in addition to its obvious physical functions. If properly arranged, lighted and furnished it creates an environment which induces a state of mental and bodily relaxation which prepares the patron for full enjoyment of the screen entertainment.

Bright, but not glaring, illumination, should bring out the full beauty of this portion of the building. Amber or flame tint lamps are always preferable to pure white bulbs. Some operators light up the auditorium at very infrequent intervals, particularly in houses offering a continuous show, and the decoration of this darkened portion of the theatre therefore may be kept very simple. The saving thus effected may well be spent in the foyer, which is the show place of every one floor theatre, constantly seen by patrons passing to and fro.

The new foyer of the Waldo has walls and ceiling of creamy tan texture stucco, and a cornice finished in old cypress. Comfortable lounges invite patrons to a chat before or after the show, while mirrors, floor lamps and tapestry hangings lend homelike touches. The room is lighted overhead by a series of ground glass ceiling fixtures which harmonize with the decorative Indian designs of the auditorium. The white pedestal drinking fountain, reminiscent of hospital corridors, disappeared when the theatre interior was wrecked, and in its place is a neat terra cotta wall fountain in polychrome shades. The foyer is well carpeted and strikes a modest note of luxury.

A stairway leads from one end of the foyer to a second floor lounge for women, a room dainty with silken drapes, cozy settees, and one or two well placed objects of art. This comfortable nook opens into a toilet room decorated in jade green, containing plumbing fixtures of the same hue. To the feminine patron, particularly, a small cosmetic room of this type makes a real appeal, and the remainder of the cozy suburban house must divide honors with this feature in creating goodwill.

From the opposite end of the Waldo foyer, a second stairway leads to the manager's office. The old theatre made no provision whatsoever for a business office. This defect has been remedied in the new structure, as a comfortably proportioned room is now available for the conduct of the theatre's affairs. Opening off the second floor corridor is a simply furnished men's lounge, with toilets, and the projection room. Beyond the projection booth is the small generator and battery room, also a small balcony, where the projectionist may test the sound effects presented from the stage, as a means toward proper machine regulation.

The old projection booth was constructed of single plastered partitions, with cement floor over wood, and was but eight feet high. The only possible ventilation came directly through an opening in the ceiling of the room. The new booth was planned with an exhaust system entirely separate from the remainder of the building, but with a fresh air supply furnished by the ventilating system which serves the auditorium. By raising the ceiling of the new projection room to ten feet the comfort of projectionists was further increased.

This new booth is of steel frame construction, with concrete floor and ceiling. Two complete sets of partitions around the room, covered with metal lath, are cement plastered on the outer and inner surfaces, so as to form a sound deadening area between. This dead space prevents the escape of possible machine noises to the auditorium.

Western Electric sound equipment is being used in the new Waldo booth, which is designed to accommodate wide screen projectors. The switchboard controlling all auditorium lighting is located in the projection room.

V
Evolution of the Auditorium

LEAVING the second floor and foyer end of the building, it is particularly interesting to follow the evolution of a 58-foot, box-like hall into an attractive 112-foot auditorium, with a gain of 343 chairs over the former capacity of 700; remembering, too, that while some 200 of the old seats were actual liabilities, each of the 1,043 new seats is a good seat.

Fortunately, the additional 54 feet of ground, needed at the rear of the old stage for the extension of the auditorium, was already owned by the Stanwoods. It was accordingly an easy matter to carry the theatre walls back to a new building line, and to match and join a new roof to the section already in place over the former seating.

The existing ceiling presented a real problem, as it was but sixteen feet above the floor at the foyer level. Raising the entire roof in this case would have been too expensive a solution. To work around this obstacle, the old curved roof trusses were left in position, and the new floor dropped to a more desirable grade.

The new ceiling was raised three feet above the roof trusses, and the old steel work was covered with metal lath, plastered, and decorated to simulate heavy beams of dark grained wood. Diagram 4 shows the method used to gain a stepped ceiling panel treatment. The process hardly adapts itself to a written description, but may be readily understood from the chart. This new construction gave the finished ceiling a height of 19 feet at the foyer level, which increased to 26 feet at the stage, owing to the descending grade of the floor.

The additional height gained by raising the ceiling greatly improved the appearance of the building by eliminating the "squatty" aspect formerly possessed by the auditorium, and allowing the erection of suspended electrical fixtures, which at the old ceiling level would have cut off or interfered with film projection. Although the old house was not bad acoustically, the breaking up of the ceiling by the deep beams and stepped panels mentioned above, also improved the sound materially.

Grille work was introduced in the sides of the overhead beams, through which air is supplied for ventilating purposes. Refrigerated air will be forced into the auditorium through these same channels during the hot summer months. A complete duct system for heating, ventilation and refrigeration is installed in the attic space between the new ceiling and roof.

Besides the problem presented by the

THE ECONOMICS OF THEATRE REMODELING

Selecting the Changes to Be Made

The First of Two Articles

By BEN SCHLANGER

JUST WHEN and why should a theatre owner think of remodeling? The most obvious needs for remodeling asserts itself when the exhibitor has competition to face. Although competition is somewhat met by giving equally as good a show as your neighbor, undoubtedly the competition you offer will be so much more effective—if the patron is drawn to your theatre by an attractive new facade, and also if the patron is made to feel more comfortable inside the theatre. The comforts to be offered to the patron are many—they involve almost every phase of the theatre building—and I think we will find theatres, even those quite recently built, lacking in many of them. The problem of remodeling a motion picture theatre is considered in this article, in the following order:

1. Survey of structural conditions.
2. The comforts of the patron.
3. The facade and exterior display.

I

Survey of Structural Conditions

OBVIOUSLY, the structural conditions should be given the first consideration since they will be the determining factors in establishing to what extent a theatre can be altered. It must be remembered that the physical shape of the interior of most theatres is not the structural shape, and therefore it will be necessary to investigate the structural elements of the building to ascertain which parts function as supports, and which parts serve merely to form the lines of the interior architectural shape.

In most theatres there is to be found a great deal of suspended and attached false construction forming the physical shape of the walls, ceiling and proscenium. These parts are not necessary to the support of any other part and are therefore more easily removable than the structural supports. Since this false construction has served only an architectural purpose, that purpose may now be obsolete, and in some instances it may be worth while to remove these parts and have a fresh start for a new interior treatment.

In some theatres it will be necessary to incorporate additional structural work, such as new balconies, lounging rooms, etc. In this event, it is advisable to place, if possible, the proposed wall or columns so that they can be carried on some existing construction.

In all cases it is advisable to attempt to secure from the original architect or builder, or the local building department having jurisdiction over construction work, a set of working drawings of the theatre building in question. These, of course, would be of a great help towards explaining the existing conditions of the building.

Having made this survey of conditions, one can proceed to the various requirements of the remodeled theatre. Assuming that there are no insurmountable structural impediments, one will be able to make a new theatre out of an old one.

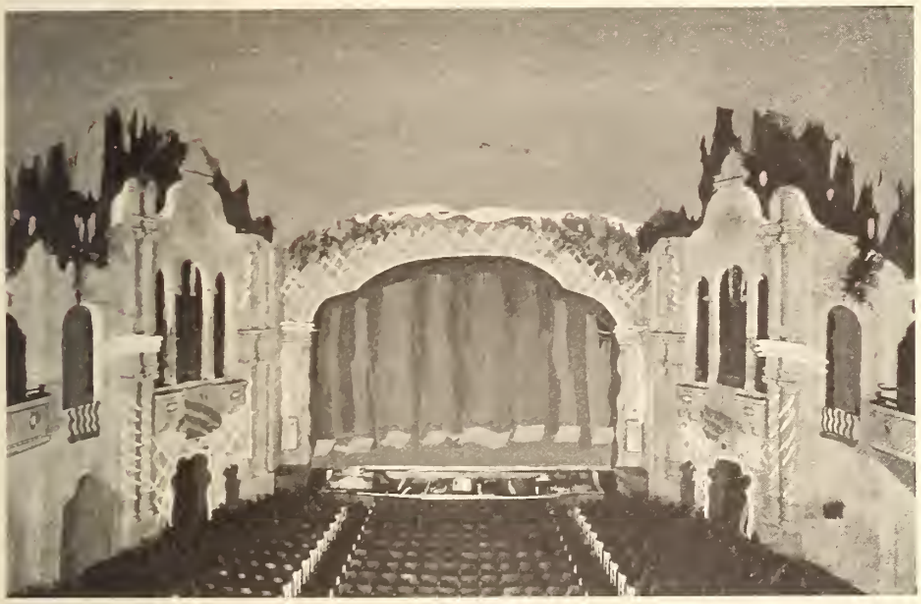
IMPROVING SOUND WHEN REMODELING

Much of the remodeling being done these days is to correct the acoustics. But there is also the theatre operator who would wish to improve the acoustics though his main purpose is to modernize the architecture or equipment. In both instances the advice offered by the noted acoustics engineer, S. K. Wolf in the department, Sound in the Theatre, should be helpful.

II

The Comfort of the Patron

THE COMFORT of the patron amounts to more than just a comfortable seat and a good view of the screen. The consideration given to his comfort should start with his entrance into the theatre. After passing through the first set of doors from the street, he should be able, without searching or asking, to find his way to the various parts of the theatre. This means that the entrance to the orchestra, the stairs to a bolcony or loge, and even stairways leading to lounge rooms, must be so located as to be in the direct line of circulation and be in full view. It is also desirable to make the walking distance, or stair climbing, to reach a seat in the auditorium, an absolute minimum. In many theatres, stairways and passageways are poorly located in the above respect—as for example, a balcony stair starting from the orchestra standing space, or a stairway so placed as to land at the top of a balcony instead of at a midpoint. Correcting such conditions should not prove too costly and would be a distinct improvement.



Sometimes the patron does not wish to be immediately seated in the auditorium, or a seat may not be available for him—thus the provision for a lounge room becomes an important consideration. This room should be placed so that it opens off some part of the direct line of circulation into the auditorium, or at least should have a stair leading to it from such a point. It should also be sufficiently "intriguing" for the patron to be willing to wait for an available seat in the auditorium. It should have comfortable furniture, mellow lighting and tasteful and quiet decoration. Where space for such a room is not available on the street floor some existing space at a lower level may be used; or such a space could be created in a one-floor theatre by building a shallow balcony, the space under which can be used as a lounge. The latter is a very good scheme, because in additon to finding space for the lounge room, this creates a sort of loge effect where the seats would be more desirable than at the rear of the orchestra. Sometimes superfluous lobby or foyer space can be transformed into a lounge.

The main lounge room should not have any accessory smoking rooms and toilet rooms opening off it, but it should be in close proximity to such rooms. Since the average theatre in need of remodelng usually has rest rooms and toilet rooms

Remodeling the Period Style into the Ultra-Modern

A Typical Atmospheric Theatre Revamped Hypothetically in a Group of Designs by Nat Karson

The above reproduction is of a composite auditorium design in the Spanish, atmospheric manner incorporating the decorative treatment and structural lines of several motion picture theatres of this type of architecture. In rendering this composite design, Mr. Karson chose as his models those theatres which lent themselves best to the presentation of his ideas, his only intention being to indicate what might be accomplished in remaking an old-style theatre into one of modernistic pattern.

THE TASK of redesigning a theatre, theoretically or otherwise, is a distinct art in itself. It differs from the designing and planning of a new project in that, one must take into consideration the structural formations and also possible architectural fallacies. It entails not only the masking of the original structure, but the application of line and form best suited to the original architectural elements. At the same time the designer of the remodeled house must make a real change.

With both these mental and physical hazards to contend with, I have come to regard the important factor in the type of design as the stress laid on lighting rather than reconstruction. This entails less expense, and also gives one a more flexible medium to work in.

My thoughts on the modern motion picture theatre are that it must me soundly designed structurally to create a pleasing design in both decorative and architectural arrangement. In the accompanying drawings I have endeavored to keep an amount of restraint in the design of the theatre interior, merely content to follow the main structural lines. These lines are covered with frosted glass into which are set series of lights which can be dimmed and intensified as desired, thus changing the direction of the prevailing architectural elements.

The fact that the design can be changed at will makes for a pleasant relief, in that the patrons are viewing the productions in ever-changing surroundings. For instance, during the showing of a smart drawing-room farce, one may desire the house to have an appearance of intimacy. To accomplish this, it is necessary only to intensify the lighting of the lower horizontal lines and diffuse the upper part of the theatre. This gives the illusion of a much smaller house and adds to the feeling of intimacy desired. On the other hand, the feature picture may be one of those "super-spectacles" and one may want to create the feeling of vast, unlimited space. For this exclusive lighting of the vertical lines gives the impression of height and therefore greater spaciousness.

Another feature I have endeavored to attain in this theatre is the illusion that the stage and screen are projected out into the auditorium past the proscenium. The proscenium in this instance is practically non-existent, as it is designed to seem a part of the domed ceiling. Both ceiling and proscenium are made of frosted glass, and the lighting makes of these two one unit, thus doing away with the usual barrier between the public and the rostrum.

All design is based on the line and curve. One finds this true of Egyptian, Greek, Roman and other periods in architecture. My conception of modern architecture is the simplicity of the elemental period forms—in other words, the absolute simplification of the pure curve and line in harmonious arrangement. Such practical materials as steel, processed glass and plaster, which have of late taken on a decorative significance, form the materials.

Frame work and structural lines are executed in steel. Pressed glass and concrete comprise the decorative materials. The glass front and side walls of the upper portions enclose office space, either for the theatre company or for renters. The domes showing above the facade surmount the main foyer and the auditorium, respectively. They are of concrete and contain the lighting system of the glass-vaulted ceilings of the rooms beneath. The marquee and vertical sign are designed as one unit and are made of steel, the letters being of pressed glass with changeable lighting. The underside of the marquee is made of frosted glass with changeable indirect lighting.

main foyer

The domed ceiling is of glass. The floor is of frosted glass with a changeable lighting arrangement. The walls are of terra cotta and a surfacing of natural wood finish. Decorative lines and railings are of chromium-plated steel. The upper and lower balcony and mezzanine promenades face the foyer.

(Right). Entrance to smoking lounges from the foyer . . . Corner columns are utilized for indirect lighting units. The walls here are finished in dull pastel tones so as to have no glare, and the niches are of painted, dark glass. Railings and decorative lines are of chromium steel.

the auditorium

Based functionally on the nature of motion picture entertainment. With simple lines created to have a dynamic rather than a dulling effect upon the visual mechanism, the auditorium is composed principally of plain wall surfaces and light. During the performance all surfaces are practically dark excepting the ceiling. In lighting and form, the ceiling projects itself down to the screen (both ceiling and area above the screen are of processed glass), guiding the eye to the motion picture illusion, which is heightened by its apparent dissociation (through the surrounding darkness) from the reality of the theatre. Illumination provides for the lighting of the vertical panels when (as in outdoor sequences) spatiality is to be emphasized, and for the lighting of the horizontal panels when intimacy (as in certain interior episodes) is desired.

IF you expect your patrons to maintain silence, it's up to you to do your share. A generous use of carpeting throughout the theatre brings noise to a minimum. It softens footfalls and kills excessive reverberation in sound films.

MODERNIZATION OF THEATRE EQUIPMENT

Help in Making Out This Phase of the Remodeling Budget

By HARRY M. PAUL

MODERNIZATION of theatre equipment has enabled our older theatres and the houses in suburban communities and small towns, to exhibit the same program as effectively as large deluxe houses. Obviously, this transition is very significant, for the competitive advantage ordinarily associated with the large metropolitan house and the brand new theatre no longer need be the bug-bear of an aggressive operator.

Modernization of equipment is absolutely necessary to insure constant box office patronage. A well equipped theatre with 400 seats can present a program as effectively as a large theatre seating many times that amount. Silent and thorough ventilation, proper projection equipment, carpets, draperies, acoustical corrections, comfortable upholstered chairs, and a screen of the right type are a few of the requirements a small theatre must be equipped with to meet competition and public demands.

A theatre manager and his employes were recently discussing who was the most important person around a theatre. Opinions were as varied as the types of work represented. The projectionist rightly said there would be no show without him, and the janitor, ushers, ticket takers, etc., used the same argument in proving their indispensibility to the theatre. Finally, one stated that he thought the most important person around a theatre was old John Public, for if he didn't plunk down his money at the ticket window, no one would have a job to demonstrate his importance.

If there were a simple formula for successful theatre operation, it would be one which—

(1) prompts John Public to pay down his money at the ticket window, and

(2) makes him comfortable inside while an interesting program is well presented, and also

(3) makes him carry away a pleasant memory of the time spent in the theatre, so that he will return frequently.

A marquee sign effectively reminds John Public of the location of the theatre, and a well designed lobby with attractive displays does much toward taking him past the ticket window and inside. Lobby frames in very attractive designs are obtainable in wood, brass or wrought iron, the cost depending upon size, construction, etc.

Prestige is offered a theatre by attractive foyers, to which uniformed attendants, ticket choppers, lighting and lighting fixtures, carpets, drapes, etc., contribute. The cost of these items vary widely depending upon the quality. Uniforms may be obtained upwards from $20. Hand-operated ticket choppers are obtainable at from $75 to $100, while those electrically operated run from $200 to $300 in price.

Once the all-important customer is inside the theatre, the reproduction of the picture should be such that the favorable impressions of the lobby and foyer are not destroyed. Perfect reproduction necessitates perfect stage and booth equipment, and excellent acoustical conditions.

REMODELING THE PROJECTION ROOM

Enlarging or otherwise improving the projection room entails many considerations of the mechanical requirements of modern projection equipment and of the factors that promote the efficiency of the projectionist. These have been discussed by F. H. Richardson in an article prepared for this issue. It appears in the department, Better Projection.

To obtain perfect sound reproduction, a special screen is necessary which differs considerably from the old type. In order to give a perfect illusion of the source of the sound, the horns should usually be placed directly behind the screen, which in turn is perforated over the entire surface to allow the sound to penetrate. The new sound screens usually lace into the frame and are made of a much lighter material. The coating is more white than the silver coating used on the old type of screen previously used. This type of screen ranges in price from 75c to $1.25 per square foot, including the frame, although it can be bought without the frame at a slightly lower cost.

The source of the sound should be well surrounded with sound absorbent material to obtain the best results. Draperies should be hung at both sides of the sound screen. It has been proved satisfactory to cover the rear of the screen and sound horns with acoustical felt, as well as the ceiling above and in front of the screen. Acoustical felt may be obtained for 60c to $1 per square yard.

FURTHER improvement of the sound at its source comes from hanging close-in curtains, which also add to the appearance of the stage and the dignity of the theatre. A curtain control which may be operated from the projection room can be purchased for these curtains for from $150 to $500, depending upon the size and weight of the curtains or draperies.

Many theatres are now using "magnascope" projection for certain shots in picture, or newsreels, necessitating a change of the screen size from standard shots. This is accomplished by a screen modifier, a sound screen unit which may be controlled from the booth. In construction, it is very simple, consisting of a steel frame on which a screen is mounted large enough to accommodate the largest shots. The masking on the screen is adjustable. It may be changed quickly and noiselessly by the operator in his booth from regular size picture to sound on film picture, and then to "magnascope," or vice versa. The modifiers have all working parts, such as ropes, pulleys, etc., enclosed in the frame. With a frame of this type, it can be arranged to have the horns attached to fly on a separate batten coincident with the frame. Also, a battery of spots can be hung close to the bottom of this frame so they may be in place for stage productions when the screen is in the fly loft.

The importance of adequate seating facilities has long been overlooked by theatre managers, but the advent of sound has contributed toward a greater recognition of this need. A person must be comfortable if he is to be entertained throughout an entire performance, and many theatres have proved the importance of comfortable seating arrangements by swelled box office receipts. The installation of chairs should afford good visibility from any part of the house, and be spaced to afford ample leg room.

For satisfactory sound reproduction it is highly advisable to install partially or

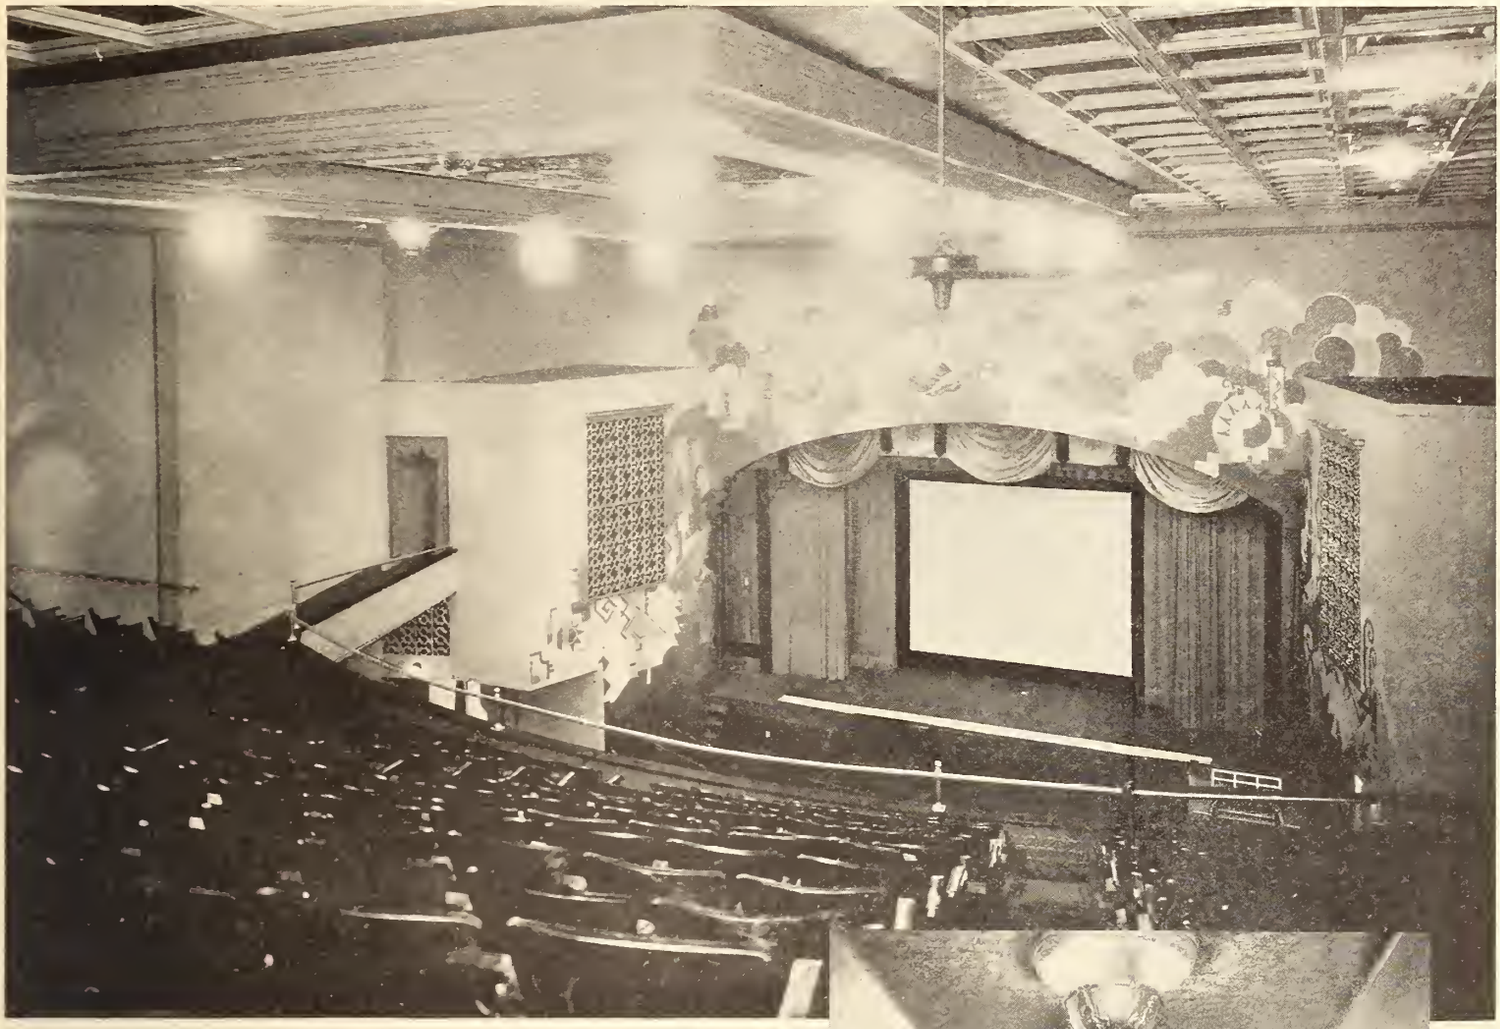
NEW THEATRES CREATED OUT OF OLD

A Group of Recently Remodeled Houses

Paramount's Ottumwa Theatre



Ottumwa, Ia.

View of the entrance at show time.

In the foyer-lounge. . .

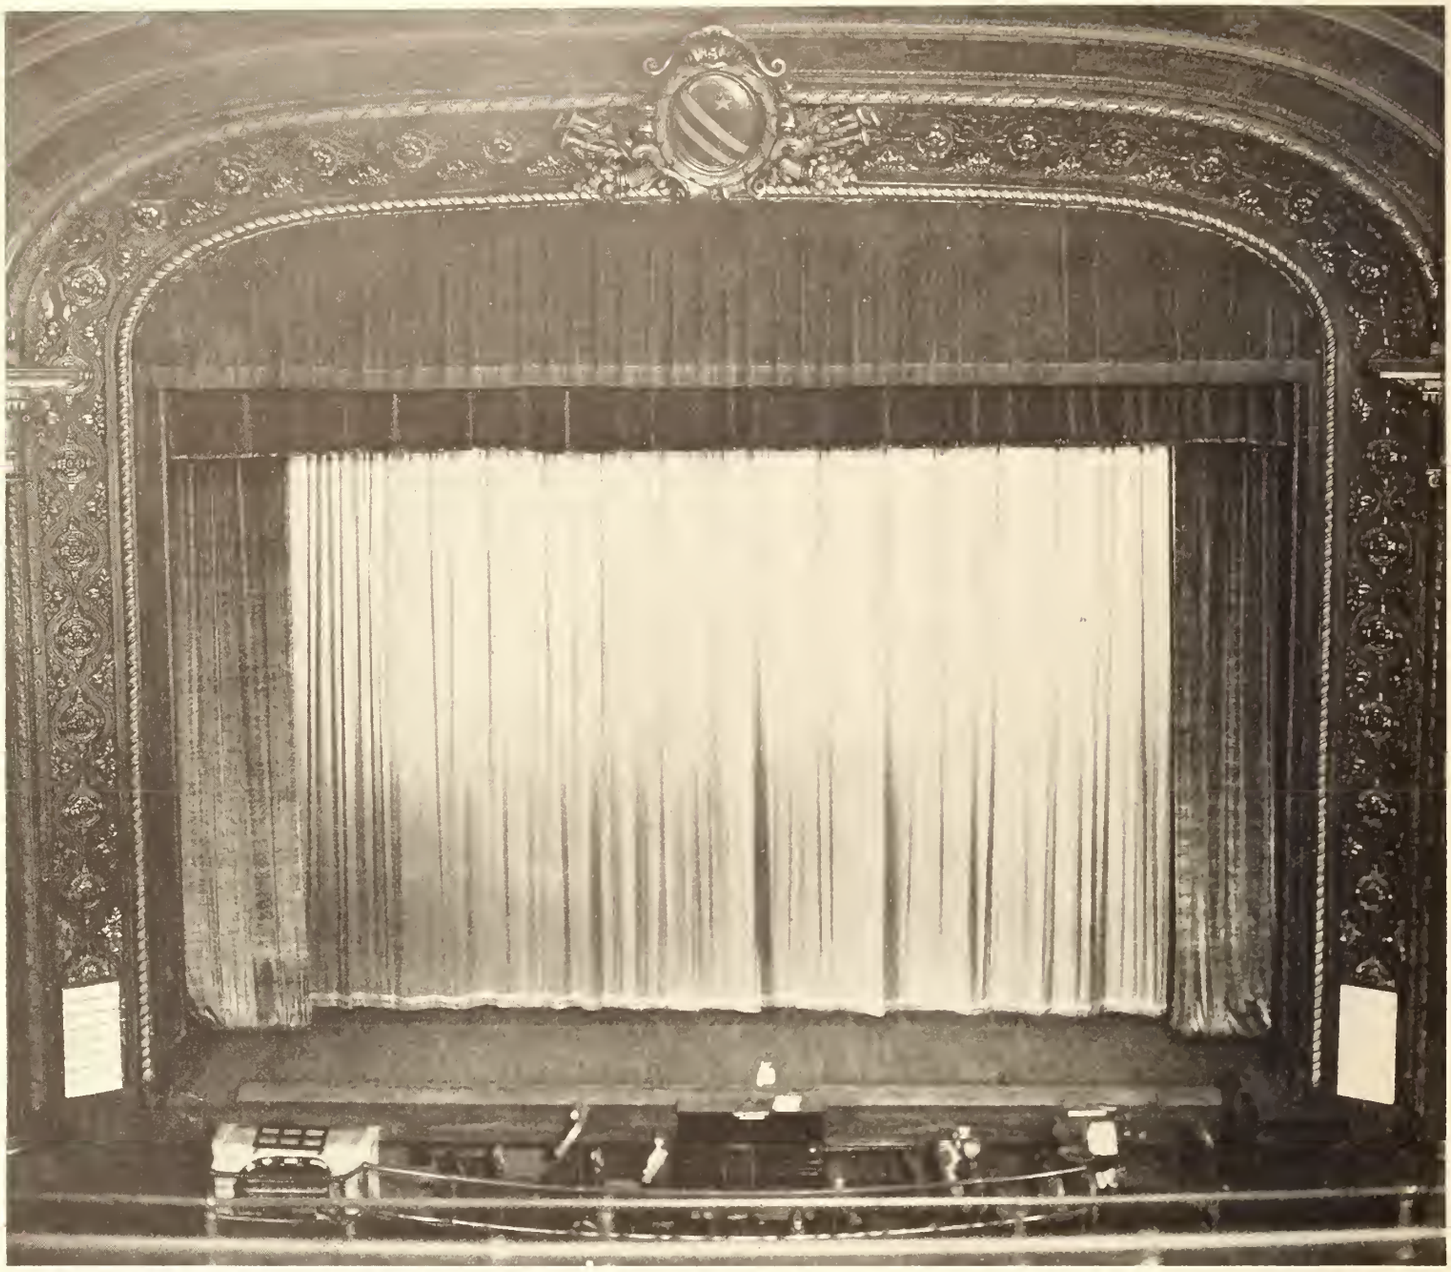
View of the new auditorium from the balcony.

Along the mezzanine promenade.

THE PARAMOUNT theatre that is now the Ottumwa in Ottumwa, Ia., was made through judicious remodeling out of a theatre building so poorly adapted to modern motion picture exhibition that it seemed beyond adequate rehabilitation. What the condition was, and what was achieved, is summarized by Manager Ted Emerson in these words:

"I wish you could have seen the run-down, dilapidated, dingy old barn that was pointed out to me as the theatre I had to sell the public, and then been there when the newly decorated, remodeled theatre was thrown open and heard the gasps of the audience who came and marvelled!"

Probably the most serious problem of the many involved in remodeling the Ottumwa, was that of acoustics. The house had Western Electric equipment, which had been kept in excellent condition, yet audition was very poor. There were four posts at the rear of the auditorium, with several curtains hanging over the aisles. These elements were eliminated by walling in the rear of the auditorium, putting in French doors at the aisles and making an inner foyer. This change contributed greatly to the present excellent acoustics of the house.



The old Ottumwa had a low balcony with a squatty projection booth at the rear. During capacity performances patrons entering the last rows of balcony seats passed through the projection light, causing their shadows to appear on the screen. To overcome this, the projection machines were elevated eight inches, the curtains and horn towers were moved back about six feet, and the masking pieces were reduced.

The original theatre had only a small retiring room for women, located on the mezzanine floor, while there was no such room for men at all. To modernize this phase of the Ottumwa, the shape of the mezzanine floor was utilized to place a women's lounge at one end, and a men's lounge at the other.

The entire theatre was redecorated. No specific motifs were used, the principle object being to create a freshened appearance with an impression of greater height. Thick carpets and heavy drapes were added, as well as new lighting fixtures of the tube type designed in a modern arrangement.

The radiators of the old theatre were moved back from the center of the lobby to the walls, and the box office, which was located in a vacant store just off the lobby, was moved to the center of the lobby, and the store space made rentable.

New seating was installed, and the projection room was doubled in size.

The proscenium arch of the remodelled Ridgewood, as seen from the balcony. New figures were introduced here following removal of the boxes. The stage drapes are also new.

The Fox Ridgewood Theatre

In the Borough of Brooklyn
New York City

THE RIDGEWOOD theatre in Brooklyn was modernized considerably by the theatre construction department of the Fox Theatres Corporation, to make it fit to meet today's competition in that borough of New York City.

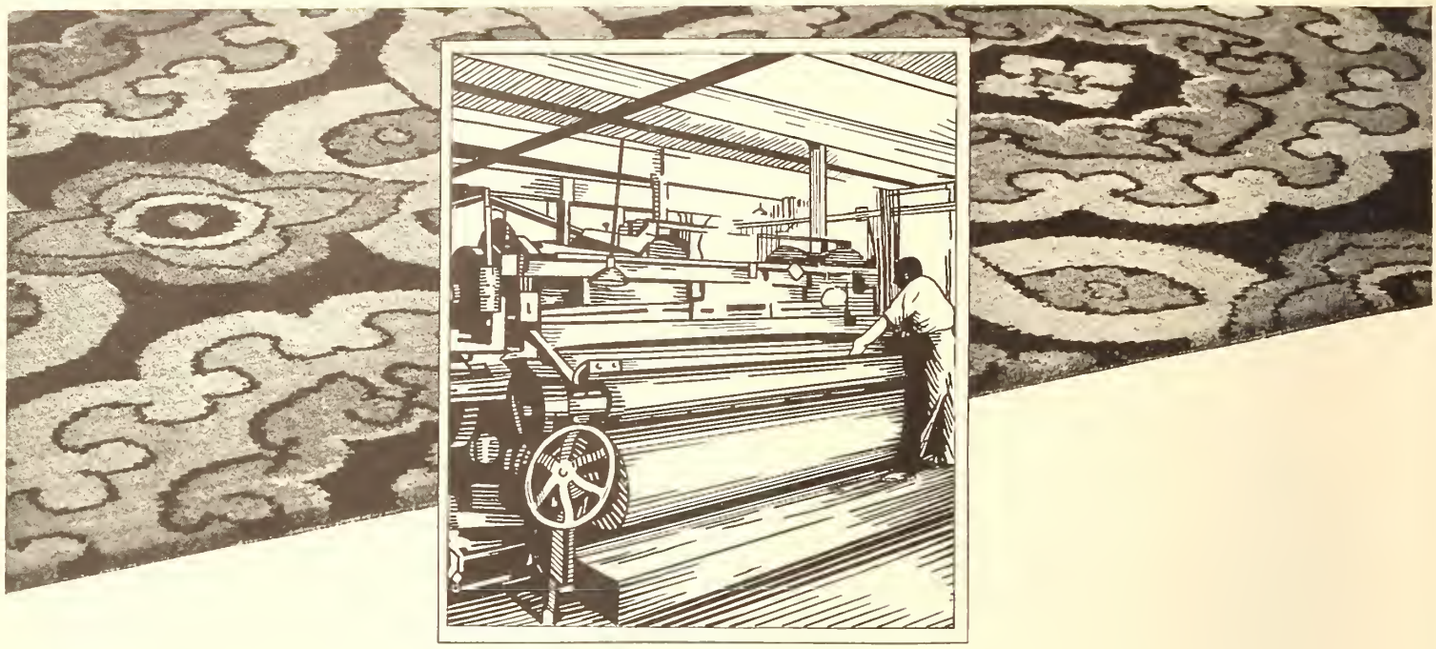
Structural changes consisted in the filling in of the well between the auditorium and the mezzanine floor, making the mezzanine promenade a spacious corridor. Major structural changes were also involved in making the projection quarters larger to provide space for new projectors, spots and effect machines, together with safety devices and auxiliary equipment.

Boxes that adjoined the proscenium arch were removed and in their place new arch features were designed. A complete air conditioning system utilizing deep well water in place of refrigeration, was installed, while there were also considerable changes in the electrical equipment made necessary by the new projection equipment and stage lighting.

Other changes include redecoration of the lobby, new seats for the auditorium chairs, new carpeting and drapes, while the plumbing was also modernized and renewed, and new lighting fixtures were added practically throughout the theatre.

Proscenium arch of the Audubon from the balcony. The old-fashioned boxes were removed and in their place an arch was contrived, framing an elegant draped decorative feature.

The Fox Audubon Theatre



In the Borough of Manhattan New York City

TO REMAKE the Audubon theatre, located in New York City (Manhattan), into what is substantially a new house in appointments and equipment, the Fox Theatres Corporation not only resorted to complete redecoration and considerable refurbishing of still useful accessories, but made many structural changes as well.

The projection room was completely torn out and an entirely new one built in. This was done to provide greater room and therefore higher efficiency for the projectionists as well as space for new projectors, high intensity spots and effect machines and auxiliary equipment.

The old theatre had the now obsolete boxes adjoining the proscenium arch, and these were removed. In their place were created architectural arches, which enclose, as a substitute decorative feature, rich new drapes.

A new air conditioning plant was also installed, while all the electrical equipment was overhauled and renovated. The old sight lines were also attacked, and to modernize this phase of the auditorium a portion of the ceiling was torn out and reshaped to eliminate interference with the view of the screen from certain areas of seats on both floors.

A CARPET Built for Theatre Service

The New Mohawk Scotia—offered in stock or specially designed patterns and colors—is loomed for long wear.

IT takes more than an ordinary carpet fabric to stand up under theatre use. The daily tramp of feet—the scuffing toes and grinding heels—soon take toll, leaving the fabric worn and "spotty." Unless—the carpet be built expressly for this heavy duty.

Such a carpet is the new Mohawk Scotia. Before a yard of this fabric was placed in the loom, experts at the Mohawk Carpet Mills analyzed the requirements of typical theatres. They studied the length of service given by the carpet in scores of theatres of varying size. They investigated design. They considered color harmony. From every viewpoint, they studied the theatre and its floor covering needs. Then, and only then, was the Scotia woven.

Scotia carpet is an excellent grade of Velvet which, as veteran carpet men well know, has always been a weave exceptionally strong and long-wearing. Yet it is also a soft and pleasing fabric under foot and it lends itself beautifully to design. Scotia carpeting is offered in more than 20 figured patterns and in many plain tones and favored shades for theatres. Moreover, Scotia carpeting is so constructed that special designs can be made up with the utmost promptness and economy.

THEATRES . . .
those either just being built or those needing a change of floor covering—are invited to consider the possibilities of Mohawk Scotia. Mohawk maintains a staff of experts in theatre carpeting requirements. They are constantly at the service of any theatre for counsel. Inquiries should be addressed to the Contract Department, Mohawk Carpet Mills, 295 Fifth Avenue, New York.

A New Loew Neighborhood Theatre

Front and side exterior view, showing the dominating sign features. Executed in decorative brick and terra cotta, the facade carries out a modern theme with an introduction of Aztec motifs.

The Triboro in the Astoria Section of New York

By CHARLES S. AARONSON

THE NEW Loew Triboro theatre is the largest house in the borough of Queens, New York City. It seats 3,800 and was designed by Thomas W. Lamb. Located on Steinway Avenue, busy commercial street in the Astoria section of the borough, it has been designed with a predominant note of the Italian Renaissance period, the motif being adapted to a modern theatrical architectural scheme.

The cost of the site, construction and furnishing has been put at $2,000,000, including an outlay of $50,000 for projection apparatus, and of $125,000 for the ventilating system. Construction work was completed by the McWilliams Construction Company three months ahead of schedule, under the direction of Harry Moskowitz, general theatre representative of Loew's, Inc., and Leon Fleischmann, head of the building department.

Contrast in exterior facade is provided by the use of a modern theme derived from the early Aztec Indian style on one side of the building.

From the finely appointed lobby leads the outer foyer, with a wide staircase on one side leading to the mezzanine and balcony. The flooring of the outer foyer is a departure from the generally accepted terrazzo, being replaced by mats in soft tones inlaid with intricate design, imparting a certain amount of beauty and walking comfort to the surface. Highly decorated doorways lead to the grand foyer.

Warm coloring, both in wall and ceiling treatment, is the dominant note here, with lofty domed ceiling giving the impression of spaciousness. Concealed lighting is used, and adds to the effectiveness. The various doors to the main auditorium lead from this foyer. Patrons waiting for seats throughout the house will be required to stand in the foyer, standees in the orchestra being prohibited.

Elevators with capacities of 55 persons will be used for the upper tiers of the balcony and mezzanine, when required. A carpeted staircase leads from the grand foyer to the mezzanine promenade, where are located the various accommodation rooms for patrons. The promenade itself is done in a richly luxurious style, without being too ostentatious. The ladies' retiring room is decorated in the style of the Spanish Renaissance, with statuettes set in the wall niches representative of the art of the period.

Groups of tropical and semi-tropical flora occupy alcoves in the walls of the grand foyer. Elaborate chandeliers are suspended by red cords from the ceiling, and the walls are done in red and gold.

The main auditorium is done in most ornate Italian garden effect with the ceiling giving the impression of the sky and stars at night. The baroque style is indicated in the architectural design here. Towers, inset gardens, balconettes, pergolas, grottoes and cascades fill the walls on both sides, flanking the large proscenium arch. The stage itself, easily transformed at any time into accommodations for a full stage presentation, is said to be the largest in New York, with the exception of the Hippodrome. On the wide curtain is painted a marine scene showing a ship of Columbus's day, again preserving the architectural motif of the theatre.

Two balconettes with blue and silver drapes conceal the organ lofts on the sides of the stage.

The backstage area contains ample dressing room space and facilities for the recreation of the performers. A new type Wurlitzer organ has been installed, one of the first of the new turntable type to be used in any theatre. The organist pushes a button and the entire organ, mounted on the turntable, swings around facing the audience, instead of the organist himself turning about.

On the stage 50 drops can be accommodated at one time. The operation of equipment is almost entirely automatic, with scene changes and the like being merely a matter of pressing buttons. All lighting is controlled from an automatic switchboard in the wings, which also controls the combinations of color in lighting the theatre. All stage settings are done in advance with this automatic board.

Above: The auditorium looking toward the rear. This chamber, seating 3,800 on two floors, has a decorative scheme representing an Italian garden wall executed in plaster and treated atmospherically.

Right: Looking down a corridor on the mezzanine floor. Wall surfaces are plain, but furnishings and a delicately tinted ceiling in a floral pattern elaborate an Italian baroque theme ornamentally.

On the ground floor, separated from the stage by a corridor, are a series of offices, including the leader's office, music library, cue room and the like. Dressing rooms are on three upper floors, at the rear of the building, and are supplied with plenty of light and air.

A new Transvox screen, in addition to special projection lenses, is used to check eye strain of audience and make the screen clearly visible from any part of the house. The Transvox Enlarging screen, the property of Loew's, Inc., can be enlarged and shortened at will while the picture is in projection.

The $125,000 ventilating system includes two separate systems, one for the foyer and one for the auditorium. The latter is kept at an even temperature at all times, eliminating drafts when the doors are open. There are three units operating together, giving the theatre a constant supply of pure air that is cool in summer and warm in the winter. One is the heating plant, the second the refrigerating plant and the third the air conditioning and circulating unit. The refrigerating unit consists of a huge compressor, which uses carbon dioxide as a chemical to convert the liquid into gas, which is in turn forced to the roof, where it comes in contact with the air conditioning system. The entire system was installed under the direction of Harry Leid, chief operating engineer of the Loew circuit.

THE LAW OF THEATRE CONSTRUCTION

Analyzing Late Decisions for Owner, Architect and Contractor

By LEO T. PARKER

GENERALLY SPEAKING, when a property owner intends to construct a theatre building, first, he consults an architect who draws the plans and writes the specifications; second, a permit is obtained to construct the building; third, bids are advertised for and submitted by contractors; fourth, the property owner and the contractor enter into a construction contract; fifth, the construction work proceeds, frequently with alterations in plans and specifications; and sixth, the architect approves the work and issues a certificate authorizing final payment to the contractor.

In order that prospective builders, as well as repairers, of theatre buildings may thoroughly understand their legal rights pertaining to the various angles of construction law, I shall review the most important recent higher court cases involving this subject.

I
Law of Architects

THE LAW is well settled that a property owner who agrees to pay an architect a stipulated price for preparation of plans and specifications and overseeing the construction work, is bound to pay the agreed sum although the former decides not to proceed with the construction work.

For instance, in the late case of Cope vs. Sutter (274 Pac. 750), it was disclosed that an owner entered into a contract agreeing to pay an architect $9,960 for preparation of plans, specifications and performance of other services. After the architect had completed a portion of the work and received payments amounting to $4,000 the owner refused to make further payments. The architect abandoned the job and sued to recover $5,610 anticipated profits.

The owner attempted to avoid liability on the contention that the contract contained no clause which prevented discharge of the architect. However, it is interesting to observe that the court held the architect entitled to recover the full amount of anticipated profits, saying:

"Respondent (owner) contends that he had the right to terminate the contract at any time because there was no provision in the contract that the owner may not discontinue the work or discharge the architect. There is no merit in this contention. There is no provision in the contract which permits the owner to discontinue the work or discharge the architect, and, in the absence of such provision in the contract, it could certainly not be terminated and the architect discharged without cause."

On the other hand, the situation is different if the architect designs a theatre building which will cost more than the property owner's original set price.

For example, in Rapp vs. Board (284 Pac. 761), it was shown that an owner had available to perform construction work the sum of $100,000, of which an architect was advised when he was requested to prepare preliminary sketches.

After completion of the plans and specifications the owner advertised for bids on the work. The lowest bid amounted to more than $135,000, and therefore the owner was unable to proceed with the construction work on account of lack of funds.

The architect sued to recover the agreed 5% commission of the contract price. However, the court held the architect not entitled to a recovery, stating the following important law:

"The fact that the plans and specifications . . . would cost more than $135,000 would seem to preclude plaintiff (architect) from recovery in this case under the well-recognized rule that an architect must prepare plans which may be constructed within the agreed sum, or otherwise he has no right to recovery."

Duty of Architect

LEGALLY an architect is an agent of the property owner, who is responsible for his acts performed within the scope of the employment. Moreover, the architect is expected by the law to perform his services in a thoroughly first class manner.

In other words, an architect is required by the law to be familiar with all of the appliances and equipment that he includes in the plans and specifications. Therefore, he cannot avoid legal liability for imperfect plans and specifications by pleading that he was not an expert in equipment that he incorrectly specifies.

For illustration, in the leading case of Hubert vs. Ailken (15 Daly 237), an architect attempted to avoid liability for improperly specifying special plumbing equipment, on the contention that he was not an expert on plumbing appliances. The court held him liable in damages for the resultant defective structure, saying:

"No one would contend that at this day an architect could shelter himself behind the plumber, and excuse his ignorance of the ordinary appliances for sanitary ventilation by saying that he was not an expert in the trade of plumbing. He is an expert in carpentry, in cements, in mortar, in the strength of materials, in the art of constructing the walls, the floors, the staircases, the roofs, and is in duty bound to possess reasonable skill and knowledge as to all these things."

Also, in 2 N. Y. S. 711, an architect was employed to prepare plans and specifications and superintend the construction of a building. After completion of the building, the owner refused to pay the architect because the size and capacity of the chimney was inadequate for efficient use of a steam heating system of which the architect was familiar.

The architect testified that he had relied upon the good judgment of the contractor to construct a chimney capable of satisfactory use with the steam heating system. It is interesting to observe that the court held the architect liable for this defect and permitted the owner to deduct from the total payments due the architect the cost of correcting the defects in the chimney.

Authority of Architect

A COMMON question is whether a theatre owner is bound by oral instructions given by an architect to a contractor to make changes and alterations from the plans and specifications, when the contract between the contractor and the owner clearly specifies that such orders must be in writing.

In the recent case of Rutherford vs. Kahler (298 S. W. 9), a higher court, in deciding this point of the law, held that although a building contract distinctly specifies that agreements must be in writing between the architect and contractor, relative to changes and additions in the plans, nevertheless the owner is responsible if the architect verbally orders changes and the contractor acts in good faith and faithfully fulfills his part of the contract.

The facts of this important case are that a contractor contracted to complete a building in 120 days. The contract gave the architect authority to make changes and additions in the plans providing he gave notice in writing to the contractor. During the work many changes were made upon the verbal orders of the architect. The contractor failed to file a written request for extension of the contract time of 120 days for completion of the work.

The owner argued that the contractor was liable for payment of damages for failure to complete the building within the time specified in the contract, because he

Continuing an interest in the familiar period motifs, usually with "atmospheric" treatment, motion picture theatre design during the last six months also continued the indications noted during the preceding six months, that architects are appealing more and more to the spirit of today and (though to a lesser extent) to the function of the theatre, for their inspiration. Other significant creations could well have been added to those shown had space permitted. These examples, however, show the trend.

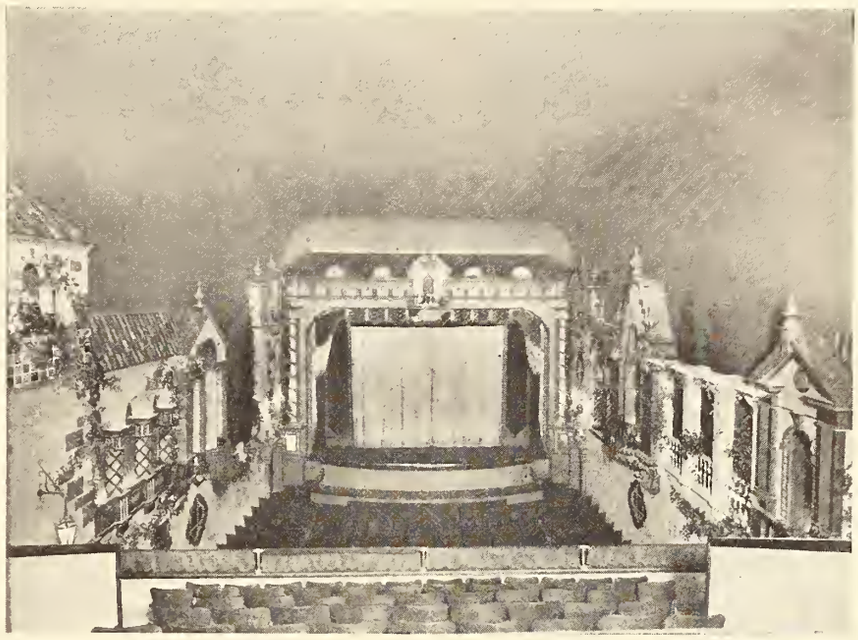
The Deluxe Idea in a Theatre of Only 700 Seats

THE NEW Russell theatre in Maysville, Ky., is an excellent example of the manner in which the small theatre may be given large theatre facilities and embellishment, merely on a much smaller scale. Though seating but 700, the Russell carries out the full intent of a period, atmospheric pattern, while it has been given, on a reduced scale, complete lounge and foyer facilities, besides, of course, the most modern equipment for presentation of screen entertainment.



The Russell is operated by Lillian Armstrong Russell, James B. Russell and J. Barbour Russell, Jr., the latter being the manager. It was designed by Frankel & Curtiss, architects, of Lexington, Ky.

The exterior, pointed with Spanish motifs, is done in polychrome terra cotta and brick, the latter being applied in three shades of buff. At the upper part of the facade are arches bordering backgrounds of blue, which give a sky effect. This portion is flood lighted at night.

The floor of the lobby is tiled. The main foyer just inside has a beamed ceiling and lighting fixtures of the candle type. A Spanish decorative note is added in the grouping of a table, a mirror and two chairs in front of a Fortuna print. Off the foyer is a small lounge for women and a retiring room for men.

The auditorium is atmospheric, being done in a Spanish garden pattern executed in variegated plaster in relief. The main floor seats 400, while the balcony seats 300. Part of the balcony is given over to a section for colored patrons, and there are retiring rooms for them on this floor also. Seating is by Heywood-Wakefield.

Other equipment includes Western Electric sound apparatus, Simplex projectors with Peerless high intensity arcs, a Vitascope screen, Westinghouse motor generator and carpeting by Mohawk.

The auditorium from the balcony, showing in the forward wall and proscenium arch decorations the Spanish treatment in relief, giving a garden effect under an atmospheric ceiling.

COMPOSING THE POSTER FOR EFFECTIVE COLOR TREATMENT

A poster by the author for "New Moon."

A practical poster artist with a large chain, here tells concisely what he has learned to guide him in the use of color, with specific examples chosen from among his own recent designs.

By LOU JONES

NOT SO MANY years ago, when motion picture exhibition was considerably less complicated than it is today, the poster (even after it had graduated from the lithograph) merely had to be vivid—perhaps lurid is the proper word. The guiding rule was plenty of color, and it didn't much concern itself (generally, at least) with color moods or color harmonies. I need not point out the change that has come about in that, nor go into the why of it. We all know what it means today to sell pictures to the public, and what distance the motion picture theatre has traveled from its carnival character of the past. I shall also try to keep my remarks otherwise brief and to the point—for I know just how much time theatre folk have to read long dissertations.

Every artist knows that wherever strong color harmonies are used, it attracts considerable attention and the modern theatre lobby should, by all means, have posters that are full of color, and "shout" to the passerby. But you must place your colors right, because the best poster in the world, in a bad color scheme, is very unattractive, while, on the other hand, an ordinary poster done in rich, lively colors is very attractive. I have seen some very good color schemes and, on close observation, found the poster was not perfect; but the average passerby does not notice every detail and the strong color attracts him.

Posters that cause the picture to "click" at the box-office are successful, those that don't are not. So your posters must have "box-office appeal," and strong colors will give them that appeal provided there is harmony with the contrast. Always give a variety in your lobby from week to week in color schemes and arrangements of your posters. I always try to use practically every color on a poster, never forgetting light-yellow and red orange—the two colors that liven up any poster, any time.

All of the colors have different moods to convey and vary as to their power of attraction. Green, blue and violet are the cool colors and are less powerful in attraction. Red, orange and yellow are the warm colors and are more powerful, stimulating, cheering and exciting.

The warm colors are more aggressive for poster work because they are stronger and more attractive. The warm colors should be used considerably in the winter, because they give the theatre front a warm, cheerful look and make the front seem more inviting to the passerby. The cool colors should be used in the summer, as they will convey the idea to the patron of a cool, comfortable theatre.

On certain types of pictures you should use certain colors. For example, on a Western type of picture use browns, reds, and orange, while on mystery pictures use greens, blues and dark purples to convey the weird mysterious effect you are trying to bring out.

Always avoid using strong reds and oranges or yellows on a feminine star, as it takes all of the loveliness, charm and sex appeal away. For example, Joan Crawford would not be effective in reds or strong orange, but, on the other hand, lavender or magenta (lightened with white) would be effective. Don't forget lavenders and purples are passionate colors and effective only on feminine stars, unless used with several other colors in a combination of colors on a head. Of course there are a few exceptions to every rule. Take, for example, Marie Dressler, a character comedienne, who can be done in strong colors and be very effective.

All of these things should be taken into consideration by the poster artist, and by watching these things in his poster, he can make them much more effective.

Much care should be taken in selecting the colors to be used in the backgrounds, as it means a whole lot in bringing out the pictorial part of the poster. It should tie in with the whole poster and help convey the idea of the picture. Some backgrounds are overdone and overpower the illustration, thus killing the effect of the whole poster.

The lettering, head and background should all harmonize in color, and if the star head means more than the title of the picture, feature the head in stronger colors than the title and lettering.

If the poster artist will keep his eyes open, he can find thousands of color ideas in magazines, on street car cards and all forms of colored advertisements. I refer you especially to the announcements of the different film companies each year. In these different issues you can find hundreds of color schemes and ideas suitable for just what you want.

The Holland: A Dutch Atmospheric Design

A New Schine Circuit Theatre Discussed by the Architect

By PETER M. HULSKEN

WHEN THE question of design for the new Schine circuit theatre in Bellefontaine, O., was considered, it was decided that the interior should be so designed that the theatre should be a part of the show. On the other hand, the theatre should be different from other existing houses, and as the majority of the atmospheric theatres are designed either in Spanish or Italian architecture, the architect decided to explore other types, as beauty and quaintness were the paramount issues. The architect therefore concluded to execute the Bellefontaine theatre in an entirely different style and disregarded any present treatments of design and color.

After considerable study it was concluded to use the middle 17th Century Holland style of architecture, for the reason that this style is picturesque, quaint and different from styles used in theatres in this country. The entire theatre, facade, lobby, foyer and auditorium, are carried out in the style prevailing in that century in Holland.

The ensemble gives a reproduction of an old town of that quaint country, Holland, where, so to speak, the rivers run over the heads of the inhabitants, where cities rest below the level of the sea, where cultivated fields are buried under the sands, and marshes become fertile gardens, and where islands are attached to the continent.

Every building in the entire scheme is a replica of some old building in that country. Every shield and coat of arms has a history and represents the coat of arms of the nation's most important cities.

Any spectator will feel himself transplanted to this country so full of history and so quaint to the inhabitants of other countries. The land of tulips, windmills and dikes is here reproduced in all its color and beauty. Called the Holland, this new theatre is the last word in construction and equipment. Everything is of the latest type, and it will meet conditions for many years hence.

Construction was completed in less than four months. The building covers an area of 66 feet by 220 feet, and is absolutely fireproof in construction. The theatre is equipped with the latest ventilating and cooling systems. It will be possible to lower the teperature inside of the theatre in the hot weather from ten to 15° below outside temperature. Great study has been given to make the acoustic properties perfect, as this is the most needed requirement in regard to sound pictures. The sound equipment is RCA Photophone. The screen is 40 feet wide and is the largest in the state of Ohio.

Entering into the lobby, which is 21 feet wide by 54 feet long, one finds a heavy beamed ceiling, a slate floor and rough walls. The walls are lined with poster frames. From this lobby one enters into the man foyer. This foyer is 14 feet wide and 40 feet long. The foyer, with its vaulted ceiling and paneled wainscoting wall, gives the impression of a great Dutch hall where the notables of that country used to gather. The walls are adorned with paintings, reproductions of famous Dutch painters such as Rembrandt, Van Dyke and others. The furniture in this foyer is typical of the period.

Attention is called to the lunettes in the ceiling at the end walls. These lunettes represent Dutch painted tiles. The National coat of arms of Holland is reproduced in the arch of the stairway. From the foyer one enters into the women's and men's lounges, and the manager's office. The check room is also located off the foyer. Here too a grand stairway leads to the balcony.

The auditorium is 64 feet wide and 112 feet long. It has a seating capacity of one thousand. Provided with four exit doors, the safety of the public has been considered also in the planning of ample aisles and stairways.

The first impression one obtains upon entering the auditorium is that the dominating feature is an effect of atmosphere and intimacy. One finds himself transplanted to an old Dutch town with a deep blue sky overhead with its flickering stare and rolling clouds. The profusion of tulips, vines and trees gives an especially outdoor-like impression. The color scheme is in delicate shades to make it perfectly restful to the eye.

The stage is so designed as to be a part of the auditorium, only separated from it by a huge stone arch, through which one looks upon a Dutch scene painted on the asbestos curtain. The grand drape is executed in a glorious sunset, setting over a field of tulips. The stage is 23 feet deep and is equipped with modern rigging. The switchboard with its dimmers is the latest design in electrical engineering.

The balcony has a seating capacity of four hundred. It is very spacious and extremely easy to ascend. Two exit stairways lead from the balcony. On top of the balcony is located the projection room, which is one of the most commodious. It is provded with battery rooms, generator rooms and wash rooms and is mechanically ventilated. It is absolutely fireproof, and all openings are provided with automatic shutters.

Under the stage are located the fan and boiler rooms, dressing rooms, musicians' rooms, etc.

The cooling system is located in a pent house over the main auditorium. All air is washed before entering into the large fans. The air is forced through the auditorium with a great velocity and taken out under and above the balcony. All air used for ventilation is taken in at the highest point above the roofs.

Particular study has been given to the selection of furniture, carpets, drapes and electric light fixtures. All electric light fixtures are replicas of fixtures in old Holland, and the majority of them have been imported from the old country. The color scheme is typical of Holland, and not in the smallest instance does anything deviate from the style of the 17th Century.

The exterior of the building has been carried out in the same style and is constructed of stone and brick. The brick is laid up in a Dutch cross bond, typical of that country.

Next to the theatre entrance are two stores. The store rooms are 56 feet deep. All stores have basement store rooms. The second floor has 12 offices. There are no outside fire escapes used on the building. All fire escapes are built inside the fire walls.

The marquee is flood lighted and has on the sides and front large attraction boards with changeable letters. The electric vertical sign, one of the largest in this part of the country, has a flashing border of three lights in width, while large center letters spell the name, Holland.

Section of the main foyer, which has a vaulted ceiling and paneled wainscoting, reproductions of Rembrandts and Van Dykes and lunettes at the ceiling representing Dutch tiles. The foyer is 14 x 40.

Deluxe Seating... Acoustically Correct

THE chair shown above typifies the class, comfort, and box-office appeal of the new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Seating. From every angle the new H-W Chairs have that class, comfort, and style which lend prestige and build profits for any theatre, regardless of size.

Most of the new H-W Chairs have been designed for use in sound houses. Several of them were developed in cooperation with Publix engineers who have made exhaustive studies of acoustical requirements in theatre equipment. The chair shown above is particularly adapted to sound use. Its soft, luxurious, sound absorbing upholstery; its custom type of tailoring on the seat and back; and its refreshingly modern aisle standard make this seat one of the most beautiful and practical designs ever built.

Publix has installed more than a quarter million H-W Theatre Seats. Many other leading chains and independents have also specified H-W Seats because of their fine workmanship, smart design, unusual comfort, and long wear. If you are planning to seat a new house or reseat an old one, it will pay you to get all the facts on H-W Theatre Seating. A note to the nearest H-W Sales Office will bring complete information.

SOUND IN THE THEATRE

ACOUSTICAL TREATMENT DURING REMODELING

Advice from An Acoustics Engineer

By S. K. WOLF

IT IS no longer a questionable statement that good sound reproduction in a theatre is dependent upon proper acoustical conditions as much as upon the correct design and functioning of the reproducing equipment. Architects and exhibitors now realize that no matter how intricate or elaborate may be the design of the auditorium, its success is determined largely upon whether or not good hearing conditions are being obtained. The architect is, of course, primarily concerned with the proposed building, whereas the management of an existing theatre has an entirely different problem to face.

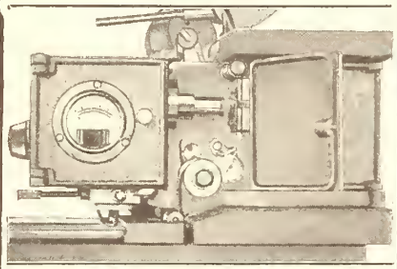
The majority of the motion picture houses of today were constructed before the advent of talking pictures and consequently little consideration was given to the question of proper acoustics. It is the purpose of this article to briefly outline a few precautions that should be taken when renovating a theatre and to offer suggestions for the most economical method of attacking the problem. This will also apply to the exhibitor who contemplates closing his theatre solely for the purpose of redecoration, since it is frequently possible at the same time, to incorporate acoustical correction at little additional expenditure.

Although much has already been written upon the subject, it might be well to hastily review some of the more common acoustical defects encountered in the present day talking motion picture theatre. These are excessive reverberation, echo, interference and non-uniform distribution. In brief, excessive reverberation means a prolongation of sound resulting in confusion caused by the over-lapping of syllables, whereas echo means a definite repetition of a sound causing a word or syllable to be clearly repeated. Interference is a meeting of direct and reflected sound waves in such a manner that certain sounds are distorted or their character considerably altered. This effect results in non-uniform distribution causing areas of high and low volume.

Excellent acoustic condition requires uniform distribution of sound energy throughout the auditorium and a proper rate of decay of a sound to make way for the succeeding sound. Some reverberation is, of course, desirable, otherwise sound would be unnatural. While the limits in which reverberation time or rate of decay lie and still produce acceptable conditions are rather wide, there is, nevertheless, an optimum value for each size of theatre and the closer this value is approached the better will be the conditions.

BEFORE DECIDING upon the decorative scheme, the exhibitor should first have a detailed acoustical analysis made of his theatre to determine its requirements. This analysis will indicate the number of units of sound absorption required to produce the optimum reverberation time at the usual audience condition. It will, in addition, point out the surfaces causing reflections of sufficient intensity and time lag to be noticeable as echoes or unusual concentrations. These surfaces should, of course, receive special attention and be treated with materials having the proper acoustic characteristics.

The location of treatment for most effectively creating the proper time rate of decay is not arrived at by placing it on the most convenient surfaces, but rather by carefully studying the proportions of the auditorium and locating it where it will be most advantageous in reducing undesirable reflections. Generally, it is preferable to install treatment toward the rear of the theatre, although in houses of irregular shape and unusual proportions an altogether different procedure may be required. Balcony houses also differ greatly from single floor houses in their method of treatment. It may, therefore, be stated that the exact location for best results varies with each particular case. This can be determined with great precision by the acoustics expert who examines the theatre at first hand.



S. K. Wolf says, following study of scores of sound theatres:

Before deciding upon the decorative scheme, the exhibitor should first have a detailed analysis made of his theatre to determine its requirements. This analysis will indicate the number of units of sound absorption required. The final report should specify several materials, any one, or combination of two or more, of which may be used to produce approximately the same results. It is often possible to offer two or more distinct plans of treatment permitting a choice of locations. It is, at this point, that the exhibitor is called upon to decide which plan to follow and to arrange his decorative scheme accordingly.

It is for these reasons that an analysis and study of the theatre should be made by a reliable authority and that the recommendations submitted be carefully followed out. The final report should specify several materials, any one, or combination of two or more of which may be used to produce approximately the same results. It is often possible to offer two or more distinct plans of treatment permitting a choice of locations and a variety of suggested materials to use in any one of these locations. It is, at this point, that the exhibitor is called upon to decide which plan to follow and to arrange his decorative scheme accordingly. This selection involves numerous governing factors which will now be taken up in a brief manner.

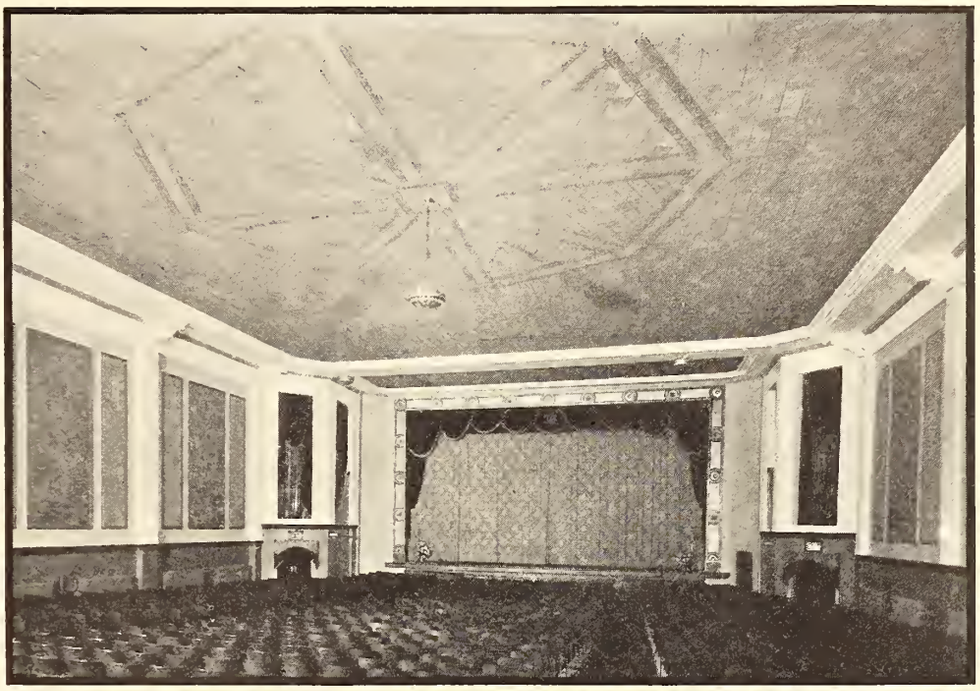
The common commercial acoustic materials may be divided into five main classes; namely, plasters, building boards, felts, mineral wools and tiles. Acoustic plasters are primarily suitable for new constructions since their relatively low absorbtion value makes it necessary to install large areas of material to furnish the required absorption. These plasters, although rough in finish, appear similar to ordinary building plaster when viewed at a slight distance from the surface. Building boards present a pleasing appearance when suitably decorated, although they, like acoustic plasters, require that large quantities be installed to provide the necessary absorption. Felts and mineral wools present very satisfactory appearance when covered with a fabric material.

Acoustic tile installations are meeting with popular approval from an appearance standpoint because of the variety of patterns which may be formed. Tiles may be cut in odd shapes, arranged in numerous designs and decorated in almost any manner providing that a paint is used that will not appreciably decrease their absorption. Some types of mechanically perforated tile may be painted with ordinary paint.

MOST OF the large and many of the smaller cities have rigidly enforced building codes relating to the use of inflammable materials in public meeting places. These restrictions are a result of a number of tragic fires in theatres, during the past few years, which resulted in panic and death. In some localities the installation of flameproofed materials is permissible whereas in a few of the large cities the choice is limited strictly to fireproof types. The requirements of the local ordinances should, therefore, be carefully checked by the management before installing any form of treatment. This will insure that at a later date it will not be necessary to tear down an otherwise satisfactory installation.

A permanent form of treatment is more desirable than one that will require replacement at some future date. Plasters, tiles and building boards fall within this class. They may all be redecorated by spray painting without appreciably impairing their acoustical efficiency. Fabric covered materials require frequent cleansing and their relatively loose structure cause them, after a time, to sag and require either replacement or reenforcement.

Some materials when subjected to a damp climate produce a noticeable odor and there are materials that are subject to attack by insects and vermin. Needless to say, any materials lying within these classes should not be considered.



A definite basis for calculating the cost of acoustical correction in general cannot be arrived at since every theatre presents a different problem. The installation of a certain relatively inexpensive, yet efficient, non-fireproof material in a theatre in one locality may be the most economical solution for that particular house. Whereas a theatre, identical in every respect, located in a nearby city may be subject to rigid fire restrictions and the management be compelled to install a strictly fireproof material at a much greater cost to accomplish the same results. This and many other limitations govern the economy of each particular case. It is for that reason, that all matters pertaining to acoustical correction should preferably be handled in collaboration with a firm of reliable, competent and unbiased acoustical consultants to insure their most effective and economical solution. Your problem will then be dealt with as an individual case and the cost of this service will be more than compensated for in the ultimate saving.

THE PROBLEM of noise reduction is also a vital factor today, especially since the introduction of noiseless recording of pictures. The presence of interfering noises tends to mask or cover up the low intensity sounds which are so necessary in creating the effect that the director wishes to achieve. There is no better time to take drastic steps to minimize noise than during the quiet summer period.

External noises, such as those caused by railways and traffic in the vicinity, should be shielded as well as possible from entrance to the theatre. The more predominant internal noises usually have their sources at the projection booth or at the ventilating and heating systems. If the theatre is equipped with a ventilating system that is creating an unnecessarily large amount of noise, and steps to reduce the noise prove futile, it will be advisable to replace it by one of a numerous variety of up-to-date systems designed for quiet operation. Any expenditures involved in this direction will, in the long run, be found highly economical since too much stress cannot be placed upon the harmful effect of interfering noises on the quality of reproduction.

Projection room noises, including both those derived from the transmission of projector noise and the penetration of the operators' voices into the auditorium, are likewise sources of annoyance and should be reduced to a minimum. In a great many cases it has been found desirable to treat acoustically the interior of the booth in an effort to improve the working condition for the operators. This increases the efficiency of projection by permitting better monitoring conditions and clearer verbal signalling during change-overs. The problem of noise reduction is sufficiently complex in nature and important in results to warrant careful consideration.

SELF-SERVICING SOUND FACILITIES

The Responsibility of the Projectionist

BY A THEATRE SOUND ENGINEER *

THE USEFULNESS of the projectionist, so far as servicing his own sound equipment is concerned, depends entirely upon two factors. One is the extent of his knowledge—both of the principles of sound apparatus in general and of the details of his own equipment in particular.

Many projectionists have seen the manufacturer's engineer fumble with a book of blueprints while an impatient audience waited for sound. The engineer may have been the most competent man in his business. Still he could not carry in his head the details of all the many types of equipment he is called upon to service. This is where the projectionist can do something the best engineer cannot. He can know, and carry in his head, the details of his own, individual, installation. If he does so, he can save the visiting engineer (and the impatient audience) a great deal of time, and often he can dispense with the engineer's visit entirely.

But detailed knowledge is not always sufficient. Many of the troubles encountered with the best of sound systems are such that a fairly broad acquaintance with the electrical and mechanical principles involved is necessary before a cure can be applied. The more any projectionist can learn, concerning those principles, the more useful he will be; if he can add to that knowldge an intimate acquaintance with the details of his own installation he can service many of his own troubles quicker than any visiting engineer could hope to.

Knowledge, then, is the first requirement of the projectionist who wishes to care for his own sound equipment. He is a technical man on a technical job, and his usefulness depends largely on how well he knows both his work and his tools. . . . The second requirement, of course, is good will—no amount of knowledge will help if a man doesn't try to use it.

The responsibilities of the projectionist in regard to sound, in all its branches, can perhaps be most fairly indicated under three headings: Operation, Maintenance and Repair.

Operation of Sound

BEYOND the regular routine of threading up film and starting the projector motor lies the matter of continual check of the quality of operation. Just as any conscientious projectionist observes his screen from time to time, to be sure the image is clear and that there is no flicker, so he should watch his sound. He should make sure the sound is clear, and all frequencies properly reproduced. He should watch for flutter, which may be described as "flicker in the sound." Often the limitations of his projection room prevent him from observing these things in the monitor. But there are two distinct ways of overcoming that handicap.

Wherever permissable, he may step out into the auditorium, and hear his sound as the audience hears it. If this cannot be done, there is often a shutter that can be opened for a moment.

If neither is possible, one can monitor the sound with headphones. Most systems are arranged to permit the headphones to be introduced into the circuit, perferably as near (electrically) to the speakers as possible. The larger radio and wireless stores stock or can obtain, rubber cups which are fitted over each receiver, to shut out extraneous noises. These will prove of great value to any projectionist who cannot visit the theatre proper for the purpose of checking upon his sound. (Earphones are most valuable in catching foreign noises or flutter—they are not particularly adaptable to checking quality.)

Flutter ("flicker in the sound") is due to an irregular motion of the film as it passes the exciting light beam, or, with disc, to an irregular motion of the record under the needle. The causes of flutter are almost innumerable; but they are always mechanical; although they differ in different make of equipment, no good mechanic should find it impossible to run down even the most obscure of them. Flutter, however, is sometimes recorded, especially in sound-on-film, and before projection room repairs are undertaken a check should be made to determine whether any flutter found to exist is due to the theatre mechanism or due to the record or print.

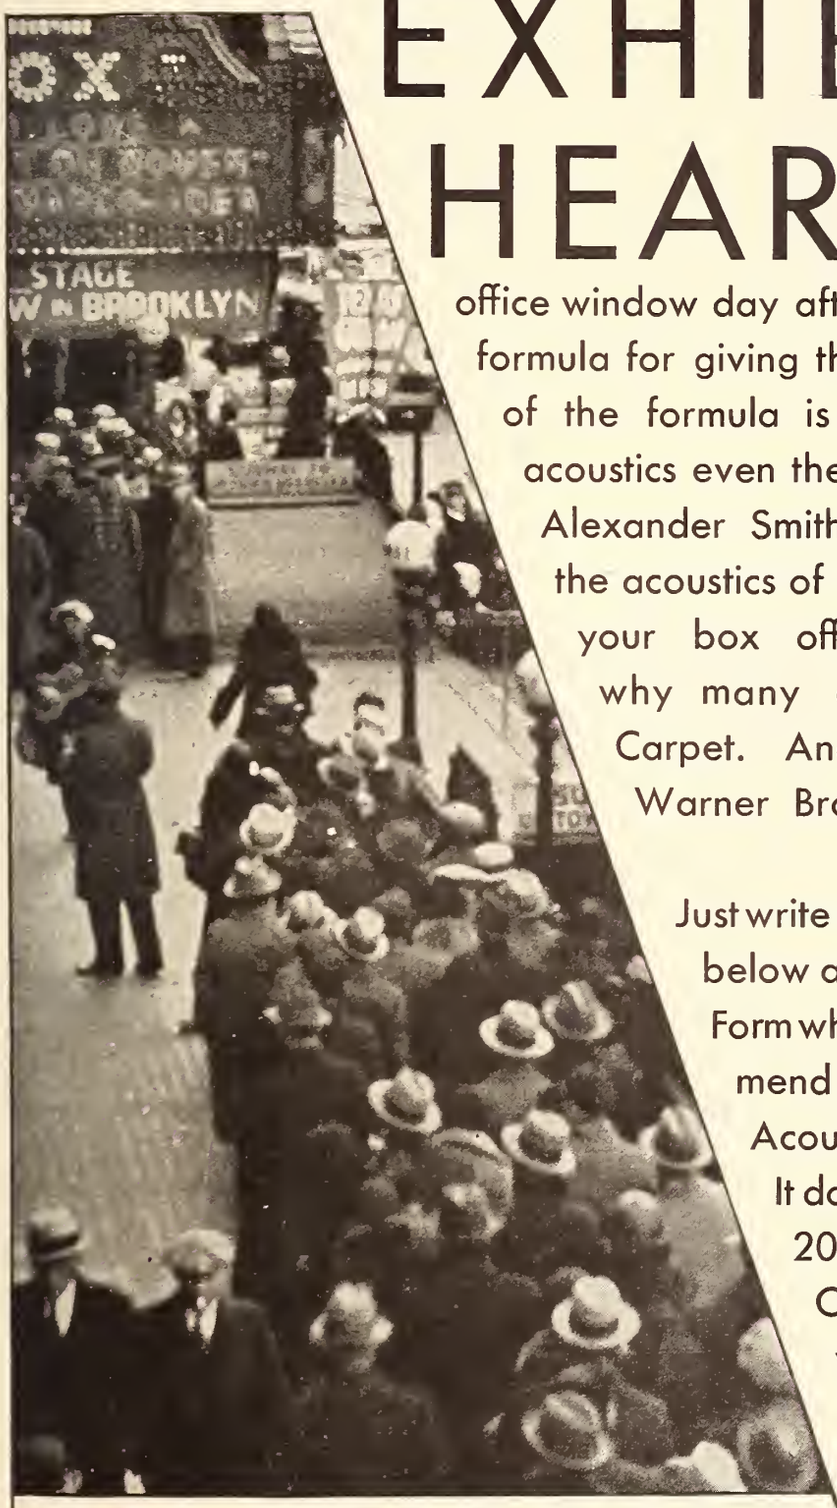
Loss of any band of frequencies in the sound may also be due to the recording; or it may be due to the sound equipment in the theatre. Improper focus of the exciting light is enough to reduce greatly the proportion of high frequencies heard by the audience, and, consequently, to impair the naturalness and realism of the sound.

Any foreign noises, no matter how slight, which are heard in the sound, deserve immediate attention. This is one of the most important reasons why a projectionist should monitor his sound conscientiously. Through experience he will become familiar with the meaning of such noises, and will learn just what trouble or coming trouble each one of them represents.

It will pay any projectionist to move the film guides out of place in order to teach himself the difference between sprocket hole noise and framing-line noise. It will pay him to place in his photocell amplifier a tube he knows to be microphonic, and then go down as close to the stage speakers as possible, and familiarize himself with the sound of a microphonic tube. Such tests, of course, cannot be made while an audience is in the theatre. They are none the less sufficiently educational to justify an earnest man in coming in a bit earlier, some morning, or going home a bit later some night.

Crackling noises may be due to dirt on the sound track, to an old record or a worn needle; they can also be due to old or defective "B" batteries or to storage batteries that need charging. These noises, however, are the same as those made by a connection of any kind preparing to come loose and stop sound. They are therefor to be taken seriously, and no conscientious man will rest, when such noises appear, until he has found and cured their cause. Dirt in any variable connection, such as a fader, volume control or rheostat, or dirt in a tube socket, interfering with contact to the prongs, will set up the identical noise, and any of these things can also stop a show. The same is true of dirt in a key switch. A defective connection inside a tube or a photo-cell will create the same crackling, paper-tearing noises. They are danger warnings, and need attention.

II



Maintenance

CLEANLINESS does more than prevent trouble due to dirt. It is easier to find and fix trouble of any kind

This is the concluding article in a series of two on "Self-Servicing Sound Facilities." The initial article, "The Manager's Responsibility for Sound," appeared in the March 14th issue. The series was prepared for Better Theatres by one of the best informed technicians in theatre sound reproduction.

*Due to the author's close professional association with many managers and projectionists, all of them fellow-workers in a large theatre organization, he has chosen to present his discussion, which sometimes implies criticism of certain methods in management and projection, anonymously.

it takes more than a famous picture

now and then to keep them coming. Show a Fairbanks, Chaplin or Dressler and you can get by with any kind of sound equipment. But for the every-day run-of-the-lot stuff that is your real bread and butter, you've got to have Syncrofilm.

Most pictures being pretty much alike, the customers will go for the one that is presented best. So a house reputation for superb production every day is as good a moneymaker as exclusive first-run rights

Syncrofilm gives you superb sound production every day. It does that by getting all the sound that's in the track and nothing else. Syncrofilm puts more light through the sound track than any other reproducer. That's what counts. More light gets more action from the photo cell. That gets more accurate sound from the speaker.

Syncrofilm is as advanced mechanically as it is in sound reproduction. There are few moving parts, and they are fitted like watchworks. All wearing surfaces are plated with chromium to give them a non-friction non-wear surface. Cadmium plating is freely used to prevent rust. The film touches only rolling surfaces; there is no friction upon it. The last showing of a run is as clear as the first.

Over 1,200 theatres now use Syncrofilm. Everyone is making money; some more than half again as much as before Syncrofilm was installed. Ask for a demonstration.

in clean machinery than in dirty equipment. Extensive dirt in any delicate apparatus has the psychological effect of discouraging the man who is trying to repair it. Anything may be hidden under all that dirt! It is a point that cannot be sufficiently emphasized. A dirty projection room has no excuse for existing.

Strict check of all meter readings is important. Meters are made to be checked; they are storm warnings; if they are not used as such the expense of putting them on the equipment remains unjustified. Exciting lamp focus, reproducer arm drift—any tests and checks which the equipment allows should be made—often. A routine of such tests and checks will help greatly to insure that nothing of importance is overlooked. Coming troubles in sound equipment very often cast their shadows before them, and the projectionist who is alert and watching for those shadows will often be able to report that again, by doing so and so, he has averted a serious breakdown.

Excessive heating of any portion of the equipment is one thing to be watched for in such routine checks. Tube operation and matching is another.

The best check for any tube—of all those available in the projection room, is to compare its operation with that of a tube known to be satisfactory. Remove the one and substitute the other, watching meters and listening to the results. With the larger tubes, however, care must be taken to insure that they are sufficiently heated. A tube that is cold may not function as well (or as poorly) as it does after it has been heated for a while. Tubes that have been discarded as defective because they are low in emission often seem, on re-test, to be satisfactory. Left to work for an hour they return to their former state. The same is true of a tube suspected of being "gassy"—insufficiently evacuated. Prolonged heating is needed to drive the remnants of gas out of the glass and metal in which they hide while cold. On the other hand a thoroughly efficient tube will often give poor results until it has become warmed up to its work.

Matching tubes is important in the case of full-wave rectifiers and push-pull amplifiers—that is, those arrangements in which tubes must work in pairs. In the case of rectifiers, the plate current passed is the criterion. There may be meters showing the plate current in each tube, or there may be only one meter giving the combined current. In the latter case lift one tube from its socket and read the current flowing through the other. In this way the matching of the rectifier tubes can be checked.

If rectifier tubes are not matched, serious danger to the rectifier itself may follow, including the possibility of burning out the plate transformer and so stopping the show.

Matching push-pull amplifier tubes is more difficult, and as satisfactory a way as any is to try different combinations and listen to the sound. A badly mismatched pair will reduce volume considerably, and also impair the quality.

The GREATEST COMEDIAN in the WORLD would be a "FLOP"

IN YOUR THEATRE IF IT IS NOT ACOUSTICALLY CORRECT

WHEN you show a famous comedian at your theatre, your patrons pay to hear his "wise cracks" as well as to see the picture. If poor hearing conditions annoy even a small part of your audience, your attendance falls off.

It's neither difficult nor expensive to make the acoustics right. Costly remodeling or closing the house for an extended period is not necessary, for Insulite Acoustile can easily and quickly be applied to the existing walls or ceilings.

Insulite Acoustile is most effective in correcting theatre acoustics, because it has a more uniform sound absorbent coefficient over the entire frequency range than any other material. This means that in the Sound Picture Theatre treated with Acoustile, the true notes of voice or music, the lowest notes and the highest, carry clearly and distinctly to every part of the house—distorting reverberations and "dead spots" are eliminated.

The tile-like units of Insulite Acoustile make your theatre pleasing to the eye as well as the ear. They can be arranged in an unlimited variety of designs to harmonize with any architectural scheme and can be beautifully decorated to achieve any desired color effect.

Let the Insulite Engineering Department help you. These Acoustical experts will gladly analyze and solve your problem. Just give them a few facts about your theatre and they will submit a practical and economical method of securing the results you desire. There is no charge or obligation on your part for this service.

REPRINT FROM

Motion Picture Herald

(March 14, 1931)

"From Sidney Mines, away up in the northern part of Nova Scotia, just about 150 miles south of the southern part of New Foundland, comes a letter from E. L. Sudbury, projectionist of the Strand Theatre, which I believe, under the circumstances, will interest our readers. He says:

" 'Dear Mr. Richardson: Our equipment is Mellaphone. It compares favorably with any Northern Electric (Western Electric as you know it) that I have heard. I installed it myself, without any trouble. It has given perfect results ever since.' "

Letter from the Pompano Theatre, Florida:

"Mellaphone Corporation,

"Dear Gentlemen: Am writing you to try and explain how satisfactory your equipment has been, and to tell you how well satisfied I am, might also state that it has gone way beyond my expectation in design and simplicity. I believe it is the most serviceable and simple head on the market.

"Yours very truly, H. C. Lane, Mgr."

Usually, the exhibitor of the medium sized house, feels that he must modify quality by price limitation. However, the cost of Mellaphone is within the most modest budget, and Mellaphone quality is paramount. Hundreds of exhibitors the world over enthusiastically proclaim the superior performance of Mellaphone. Mellaphone is unerring in performance, it is simple and dependable with true fidelity of tone.

The mere fact that any pair of tubes match is not sufficient indication that they are fit for use: both may be bad. They can be tested against a matched pair known to be good, or each can be tested by pairing it with a good tube; if a moderately satisfactory match cannot be obtained between any two good tubes of the same type, something is wrong. But for best results more than a moderately satisfactory match between paired tubes is required, especially in the case of rectifiers.

Tests of apparatus of all kinds, where no more accurate check is provided for in the design of the equipment, can best be made by using the part under suspicion and comparing the results so obtained with the results when using another of the same parts, known to be good.

What is most valuable in all such tests is the greatest possible knowledge of the theory of the functioning of sound systems. The projectionist who understands that will be able to appraise the results of his testing more intelligently; he will be better able to judge when a tube, for example, which is not fit for use in one socket, can still be used in another.

In the same way a good basic knowledge of the fundamentals of sound practice will help the projectionist in his routine tests. The man who is not well grounded in those fundamentals will fail to perceive indications of coming trouble which another man, who has grounded himself more thoroughly, will observe at a glance. Perhaps the most important part of maintenance (next to cleanliness) is self-education.

III

Repair

TROUBLE IN a theatre is something to be remedied as quickly as possible, because an audience is waiting. If the repair isn't prompt, they will demand refunds. Therefore delay is expensive, and the most important consideration in respect to repair is promptness.

In this connection the projectionist can make himself invaluable. He can learn, intimately, every last wire, nut and bolt in his own sound equipment. No service engineer, responsible for a dozen theatres, can possibly do that.

The wiring in any theatre loops back and forth across the projection room. In the case of trouble in any individual circuit a great deal of time can be saved if the man looking for the trouble knows just which box, cut-out or panel to go to find the next stages of that circuit to be tested. If, further, he knows exactly what pair of wires he wants inside that box or panel, his usefulness is multiplied. And if a man knows nothing at all about those things he can spend hours trying to find a burnt-out fuse: it has happened.

It is in knowledge of the details of his equipment that any projectionist can surpass the most competent engineer; but if, in addition, he carries about with him some fair proportion of the other's training in the basic principles of sound mechanics, he has little for the engineer at any time.

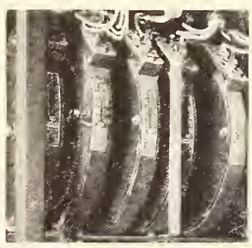
Mr. Benjamin F. Swanson, Chief Electrician of the Publix Michigan Theaters Corporation chain.

C-H "Simplicity" Dimmer Plates are supplied by leading dimmerboard manufacturers with the board they install. This is the front of a typical dimmerboard.



"COLOR! Movement! Light! That's what appeals to the audience." Mr. Ben Swanson, chief electrician of the Publix Michigan Theaters Corporation, Detroit, Michigan, goes on to say:

"There's nothing like smooth lighting to put the polish on a fine show. Glamour! That's what the public wants and lots of it.

"Backstage they know how quick lighting reacts upon an audience. But it's got to be smooth and gradual. It can't be jerky or spotty or you spoil the show.

"Responsibility for many dimmerboards has proved to me that you can't have smooth lighting unless you've got good dimmer plates. That's why I say dimmer plates help dress up a show.

"When you get down to fundamentals, dimmer plates are the heart of all your light effects."

Showing C-H Dimmer Plates compactly mounted on the rear of the dimmerboard. Note the readily accessible terminals which lessen installation costs.

Dressing up your theater with good lighting isn't an expensive undertaking. Small theaters as well as the larger houses can have velvet-smooth lighting with Cutler-Hammer "Simplicity" Dimmers. These dimmer plates fit any dimmerboard. They are compact, cool in operation, and free from burn-outs. Direct rack and pinion drive and multiple-contact insure perfect blending of all your lighting changes.

except so far as two heads are always better than one.

The projectionist who has absorbed that much knowledge will very soon develop his own methods of tracing down trouble in the shortest possible time. Space forbids a detailed analysis in these columns of the methods in most common use today. In general, they revolve about the procedure of isolating the guilty portion of the equipment, and then replacing it, if possible (or bridging it), rather than stopping to repair it.

But this procedure of isolation depends, for its effectiveness, upon considerable detailed knowledge. For example, a while back mention was made of crackling noises in the sound, and some of the many causes of such noises were listed. No competent "trouble-shooter" would waste the time necessary to check all of those causes, and others not mentioned, one after the other. Instead he would ask himself (for example) if the trouble appeared on both projectors. It it did not the storage batteries would be exonerated, for the same set most commonly supplies both. In fact, that one question and answer has reduced the list of possible causes by more than half. A few more questions, possibly one or two tests, of the same general nature, would isolate the trouble to a matter of a very few possibilities, which could then be checked, one after another. The same general procedure applies to troubles of every nature, except those where the cause is known through meter readings or some similar indication, or those that appear only intermittently.

No test for isolation helps with troubles that are inconstant. The fact that the trouble does not appear when a certain test is made means nothing under those circumstances. Testing and a process of isolation are possible only for so long as the trouble lasts. If the matter is serious it will be well to list all possible causes for the disturbance in question, and apply all possible remedies, en masse.

Supplies

THE PROJECTIONIST who is competent to do so can be of invaluable service to his theatre in advising the manager as to the purchase of supplies. Substantial sums can often be obtained by using substitute makes (where the theatre's contract with the manufacturer of the sound system permits this): provided, however, that the quality of the substitutes is satisfactory. Otherwise they can cost far more than they save. The projectionist who knows enough to give valuable advice in such matters is worth many times his wages to anybody's theatre.

Similar considerations apply to the revision or possible modernizing of sound equipment, whether proposed by its manufacturer or by others. Battery eliminators are now available for some of the older installations, and many other devices, intended to cut the cost of replacement or of maintenance.

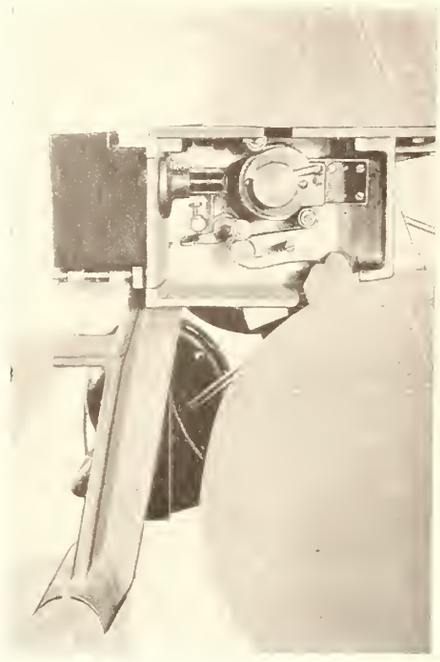
New P. E. Cell Sizes

THREE NEW SIZES of Visitron Type A photoelectric cells have been brought out by the G-M Laboratories, Inc. These bring the total number of sizes of Visitron cells to seven.

The additional sizes were developed so as to complete the G-M line of photoelectric cells for theatre sound installation.

New Sound Head

A NEW MODEL of Saf-Ray sound-on-film reproducer has been developed by Simplimus, Inc. This model also employs the principle of the "light ray," instead of wired connections from the exciter lamp to the photoelectric cell, but has been designed as a refinement of the earlier models.



Small Motor Apparatus

IN THE Pictur-Fone sound-on-film equipment, made by the Pictur-Fone Corporation of Lima, O., annular ball-bearings, with felt grease retainers, are used to enable the machine to be driven with a small synchronous motor, which also drives the projector.

The exciter lamp holder cannot be jarred out of position, being extremely rigid and necessitating the loosening of a set screw before its position can be changed. Electrical impedances are matched. Pictur-Fone equipment is designed for any theatre, regardless of size.

New Sound Head Type

A SOUND HEAD adapting Syncrofilm, sound-on-film equipment manufactured by the Weber Machine Company of Rochester, N. Y., to Motiograph projectors, has been developed by the Weber engineers. The head is, of course, the same in fundamental design as the models for other makes of projectors.

The Syncrofilm system has been described before, but shown here is a new detail view of the head.

Mohair for Acoustics

THROUGH the use of a Velmo mohair upholstery, on the seats of the Public Balaban & Katz Chicago theatre, the acoustics of the theatre have been improved, we are informed. It has also served to make the seats more easily visible in the darkness necessary to the showing of films, which is something new in the value of upholstery.

The Mohair Institute of Chicago tells us that the peculiar light-reflecting qualities of thousands of erect mohair fibres on the tops and backs of the seats, plus a special dye, are responsible for this thus far little utilized property of the material.

sound talks

by F. H. Richardson

Proper Observation

WHAT constitutes perfection in sound? Here is my own answer: It is reproduction of exactly what the "mike" heard—including transmission of that sound from the horns to the ears of the audience. It means such reproduction and transmission as will enable the audoience to hear precisely what the microphone heard, in exactly the way the mike heard it.

JUST EXACTLY what pains have you taken to study sound, to the end that you may judge with reasonable precision as to whether or no the sound you are reproducing is natural? Since the ghost-dance upon the screen began to talk, sing and make music, have you been at real pains to take note of the various sounds and their peculiarities to the end that you may know just what they should be?

IT IS QUITE true that sounds of the same general class vary widely, but it is always possible for the one who has really studied sound to determine whether or not sound is distorted.

I KNOW the projectionist cannot hear well the sounds he is reproducing. That fact is not especially to the credit of our sound engineers. They have worked near-miracles, but in this matter they have thus far fallen down. This failure hampers the work of projection. But the conscientious projectionist will find a way to visit, by proxy or personally, the auditorium while projection is in progress. This may certainly be done in any but a one-man projection room.

THE MANAGER should remember that the projectionist is completely cut off from the real sound he is reproducing. The monitor horn tells him absolutely nothing about what the audience hears. Have you a really capable observer? Or have you an "observer" who ushers while "observing"? Or one who observes only when the sound gets so bad that the audience begins to whistle or clap their hands?

I VISIT too many theatres not to know the methods. I know that in too many of them proper observation is not maintained. And it should be. Vigilantly!

Combining Talking Pictures and the Stage

THE FIRST serious attempt to combine the talking picture and the legitimate stage was recently made in the Theatre Guild production, "Miracle at Verdun," at the Martin Beck theatre in New York.

The play, written by Hans Chlumberg, a former officer in the Austrian Cavalry during the World War, deals with the idea of the resurrection of the war dead, and shows what might be the social and economic consequences were such a resurrection to occur.

The use of talking picture sequences in the play was made to overcome the physical limitations of the stage, and whatever the merits of the production as a whole may be, it does demonstrate that there are great possibilities in the merging of the two media for the creation of effects not possible of attainment solely through the technique of the "legitimate" stage.

In the production, seven talking picture sequences play an important part in the performance and are interwoven in the action carried on the stage by a cast of seventy actors. Several of the talking picture sequences have the same actors who appear on the stage in the legitimate portions of the play.

This merging of stage and screen, unique in itself, has several unique features. Three individual pictures are projected in unison on one large screen, which forms the outline of a huge cross. In the opening scene of the play, a talking picture sequence, the audience sees tremendous battle scenes projected on the giant screen as three separate scenes. The accompanying sound effects are dramatic in their realism and intensity.

In another sequence a speaker is heard and seen in the central portion of the screen, and at either side great crowds of people are seen and heard listening to the speech and applauding at intervals. The reactions and applause of the crowds are perfectly synchronized with the action and words of the speaker. In still another sequence the resurrected dead soldiers are shown on the march, and as they troop across the three screens, an effect of limitless space and time is achieved.

The sound installation, which was made by Electrical Research Products, is unique in many respects. Three projectors are used, each having its own amplifier system. To obtain simultaneous reproduction of the three machines in synchronism, an electrically interlocked system of driving motors was provided. This system, while essentially the same as that used in recording studio equipment, required duplication and, in addition,, specially designed switching arrangements to permit the independent operation of any one machine with the remaining two interlocked. The arrangement also provides for the usual operation.

Seventeen loud speakers are used with eleven back stage, three of which are used entirely for sound effects, two in the proscenium arch and four in the auditorium.—Will Whitmore.

Automatic Scale

A SCALE of practical design for use in motion picture houses has been placed on the market by the Watling Scale Manufacturing Company, 4653 W. Fulton Street, Chicago, which foresees in the theatres of the country a profitable adjunct to the revenue of exhibitors through the use of scales.

Pioneer builders of scales which are used throughout the world, the Watling Company has developed a model known as the Tom Thumb, which the company believes will find ready favor with theatre owners. Not only is the new scale built to take up a minimum amount of space but it has been especially enhanced from a decorative standpoint to make it harmonize with modern theatre surroundings.

The scale recommended for theatres is four feet high, springless in operation, and is faced with a mirror. All parts are counterbalanced and it is declared to be virtually fool-proof in operation. The coin may be inserted either before or after stepping on the scale. The scale is made of cast-iron top and base with steel cabinet enameled and furnished in a variety of colors. It is of light weight and has brass rollers so as to be easily moved.

Following the success of candy vending machines, at least one large circuit has already found the installation of weighing scales a promising source of income. The Watling scale has been designed for this type of installation.

Foyer Recording

A MEANS of patron entertainment, as well as added revenue, is self-recording in the lobby or foyer of the theatre. The possibilities of this novelty, which was used to good advantage for quite some time by one of the largest theatres in New York, have been discussed previously in this department. Now Vocamat, a New York company, has developed a cabinet type recorder that acts like a vending machine. In fact, it does vend—emitting the record quickly after the voice has been recorded.

The machine is electrically operated, and it is necessary only for the patron to insert a coin, speak or sing, as he chooses, until a dial pointer comes to the word "Finish," receive the record from the cabinet, automatically, and if desiring to hear the record immediately, place it on the phonograph turntable mounted on the outside of the cabinet.

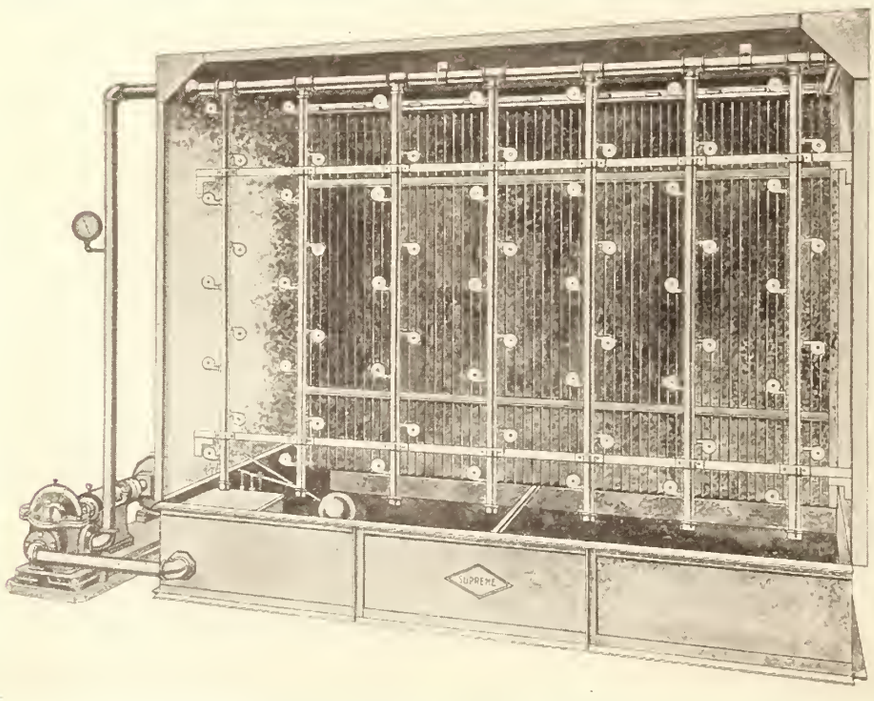
New Cooling System

ENGINEERS of the Supreme Heater & Ventilating Corporation of St. Louis, who have been working during the past three years on a physical principle in which the temperature of the air is actually reduced through the use of a process of evaporation of water, have now incorporated their ideas in a new Supreme cooling system.

The system consists of a slow-speed, low-power blower fan, a five-speed electric controller, the well known Supreme Automatic Oscillating Air Diffuser, and the new evaporator unit.



The air induced into the system by suction of the blower fan enters the evaporator unit at low velocity. It is there forced into contact with a completely atomized mist, a perfect barrier of interlocking spray of water at no less than twenty pounds of nozzle pressure. The process of evaporation begins immediately—from the fine spray, the surface of the larger drops of water and from the surface of the bed of water in the supply tank. In this process of evaporation heat transfer from the water to the air takes place. The circulating water is cooled to approximately the wet bulb temperature, which with air containing the average percentage of relative humidity would be many degrees below the dry bulb or ordinary thermometer temperature.

When the circulating water reaches this wet bulb temperature it remains constant as long as the entering air temperature and relative humidity do not vary. In the process the water is circulated, sprayed and cooled. Only a certain amount of the air passing through the spray chamber, or evaporator, is necessary in this evaporation for cooling the water. The greater portion of the air, with only a partial amount of the relative humidity it is capable of carrying, passes through the evaporator without absorbing any moisture. In fact, we are told, it has been found that this portion even gives up some of its moisture while being cooled by contact with the cold circulating atomized water.

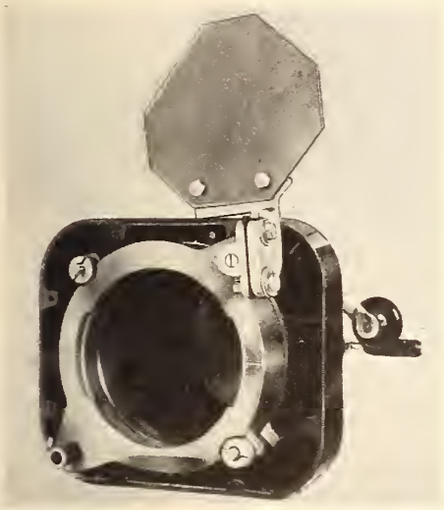
There is, therefore, according to Supreme Engineers, a mixture of air entering the theatre, a small volume that has performed the work of evaporation in cooling the circulating water, and a large volume that has performed no work, but has been cooled by contact with the cold water and hence has given off its heat to the water. The small volume of air engaged in the evaporation process becomes completely saturated.

The air is delivered into the auditorium at a fairly high velocity. As soon as this mixture of cooled air containing a fraction of the moisture it can hold, and the small volume of saturated air enters the theatre, the work of evaporation and absorbtion of the moisture in the auditorium and on the bodies of the occupants occurs. This activity sets up the effective temperature (actual coolness rather than the reading on the ordinary thermometer).

One of the essentials of the system is easy exit for the air that is constantly inducted into the theatre through the system. Normally in theatres not having balconies the exit doors provide ample opening for the escape of the air. Where there is a balcony, additional provisions must be made for the positive and rapid removal of the air. Otherwise moisture will build up in the auditorium that will defeat the entire plan of the system.

Spray chamber of the new Supreme cooling system.

New Condenser System



AN interesting cooperative effort on the part of two companies has resulted in a new projection light condensing system with special lamp and housing. To appreciate the lines along which this effort was conducted and what has been accomplished, it may be well to trace briefly the conditions that brought it about. Of course, sound was at the bottom of it.

The sound screen brought loss of image brightness, of course, and the theatre which formerly projected a bright picture found its screen considerably darkened after the installation of sound equipment. As a result carbons were frequently overloaded, larger sizes of carbons were tried out, and in some cases the current carrying capacities of standard carbons were increased.

The research department of Bausch and Lomb attacked the situation by developing a new light condensing system consisting in a 5½-inch diameter collector lens, with a cylindrically ground curve on the rear, or collecting, surface, in combination with a six-inch parabolic converging lens, the special curves of which allowed the full diameter to be employed with an increase, it has been claimed, of more than 50 per cent in illumination.

And now Hall & Connolly, of New York, manufacturers of high intensity lamps, has designed a lamp and housing to accommodate these condensers. The lamphouse is larger, increasing ventilation, and the two condensers are incorporated in one holder, with fixed spacing of the two lenses in the mount. The mounting and condensers are readily removed from the lamp as one unit. Hall & Connolly has also designed a mounting for the special condensers for their use with all types of lamps. This mount, or holder, is attached to any of the older type of lamps and is furnished in one complete assembly unit which utilizes the original screw holes in the lamphouse when the old mounting, in its entirety, is removed.

New Motor Line

A NEW line of fractional horsepower motors has been brought out by the Century Electric Company of St. Louis. The motors have interchangeable mounting dimensions with respect to Repulsion Start Induction Single Phase, Split Phase Single Phase, Squirrell Cage Induction Three Phase, and D. C. types.

The bearing brackets are designed to give special protection against falling objects, dirt and dripping water, and the motors themselves have rolled steel frames and welded steel feet slotted for belt adjustment. The bearing are of phosphor bronze. The Century wool yarn system of lubrication is used.

Film Cleaning Process

A NEW process of removing dirt and oil from film has been brought out by the Rex Film Renovator Manufacturing Company of Columbus, O., ostensibly in direct response to the need for immaculate film if the sound-on-film print is to be properly reproduced.

The process involves the use of a liquid wax that acts to absorb the dirt and oil, and of a renovating machine through which the waxed film is run. The system varies for old and new stock.

According to the manufacturers, film from 30 to 90 days or more old is waxed and allowed to dry from two to four hours, then run through the renovator. New film is dried about ten hours after waxing before being renovated. The treatment of new film is for the purpose of curing the film of greenness and eliminating any danger that the emulsion will adhere to the tension springs, or that the sprocket holes will tear.

Triple Lens Turret

A LENS turret combining the three types of projection lenses now more or less commonly in use, has been brought out for all models of Simplex projectors by the International Projector Corporation.

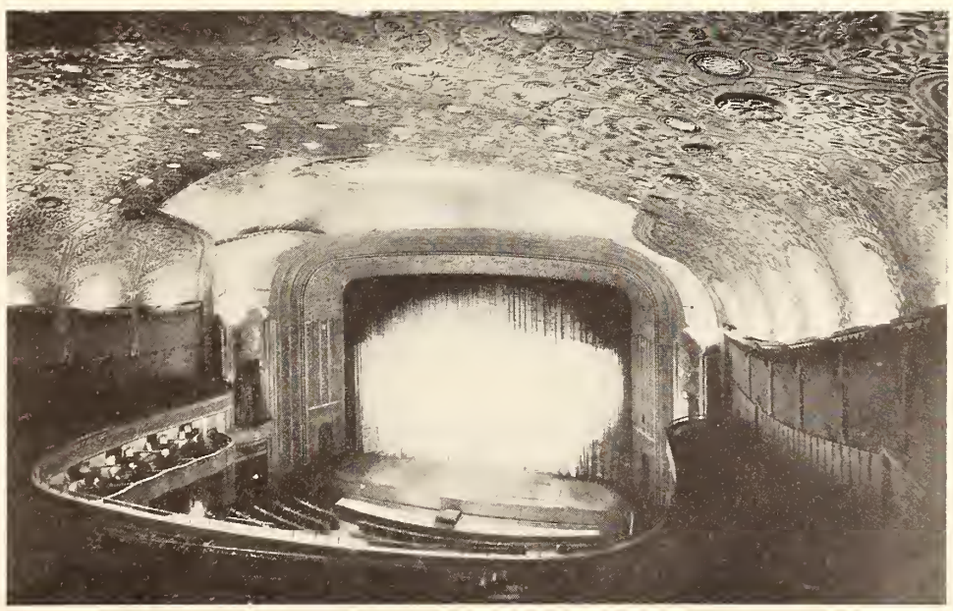
Each of the mounts may be separately adjusted both vertically and laterally, and also separately focused. Accommodation is for all makes and focal lengths of either half- or quarter-size. One mount is for the silent or disc-sound film, another is for sound-on-film prints, while the other is for the large ("magnascopic") image, or any other special effect.

For the purposes of precision with quick operation, the turret itself is mounted on grooved rollers with exact position indicated not only by the force with which the turret slips into place for any lens, but also by a little clicking sound. Lenses are brought into position by pressing a lever which easily turns the turret through a 120° arc.

Along with the turret, a new film protector and gate latch assembly are provided so that the projectionist does not have to place his hand inside the mechanism when closing the gate while threading. A mirror arrangement is also provided on the rear of each lens chamber, permitting the projectionist to observe the aperture for framing.

Metallic Surface Screen

A METALLIC surface screen has been developed by the Walker-American Corporation, manufacturers of the Walker Soundscreen. Marketed through the National Theatre Supply Company under the trade name of Silversheet, the screen is designed to effect increased illumination without glare, a matte finish being employed. Any increase in illumination qualities of a screen, of course, means economy in projection lighting.



Regarding the possibility that the metallic surface would be inclined to oxidize rapidly and therefore bring about an impaired surface, the manufacturers assert that this has been taken care of by coating the surface so that it is not exposed to the air. The manufacturers also claim fire resisting qualities for the screen. The material is by DuPont.

Console Light Control

AN unique switchboard installation has just been completed at a non-commercial hall which has similar application to the motion picture theatre, since it provides for illumination control (preset dimming) with an extremely high degree of sensitivity. The installation was made by Westinghouse at the Severance Memorial Hall in Cleveland.

The switchboard is built into an ordinary organ console, which is operated from in front of the stage, and it has 4,000 light combinations with 36 main control drums projecting three-quarters of an inch above the keyboard panel through which 110 circuits are brightened or dimmed. The controls are spaced only 15 sixteenths of an inch apart.

There are also nine foot controls, which may be used in lieu of the hand controls.

8 Months' Continuous Service Proves Reliability

OF SAF-RAY NOISELESS

SOUND-ON-FILM SYSTEM

It's true, we were revolutionists when we set out to design a film reproducer that would work in the average theatre — the little ones as well as the De Luxers. We took a radical short-cut to noiseless reproduction when we threw yesterday's ideas out the window and isolated amplifiers and photo cell from the projector.

Theatre men, proverbially hard-boiled, made us prove we were right. We have done that — what with 8 months of continuous service day-in and day-out in theatres without benefit of high-priced service men to coddle the machines.

SAF-RAY'S have won new patrons for theatres (write us and we'll tell you the names and addresses of exhibitors who have been operating with SAF-RAY over a period of months without spending a penny for servicing).

SAF-RAY is simple to install — Amplifier and Photo Cell are set up in a separate rack mounted between two Projectors — adjustments are made and all is in readiness for installation when you receive the equipment from our factory. SAF-RAY does away with storage batteries, chargers and motor generators.

The Men Who Say "Go Ahead," "Yes," and "OK" to Spending One Hundred Million Dollars All Read Better Theatres

Conservative estimates show that more than 85 million dollars will be spent in building motion picture theatres during 1931. Many millions more will be expended in remodeling operations—bringing old theatres up to date. So it is certain that at least one hundred million dollars will go into these operations this year.

Better Theatres—published every fourth week as a special separate section of Motion Picture Herald—reaches every important owner, executive, operator and builder concerned with theatre construction, equipment and maintenance. The circulation is more than 18,000 ABC.

We will gladly tell you more about this rich market and its complete coverage by Better Theatres.

booklets

. . . briefly describing the new brochures and bulletins issued by manufacturers and distributors on their product. Those of further interest may be procured directly from their publishers or through Better Theatres. Manufacturers and distributors are invited to send in their publications immediately on issuance for review in this department.

Emergency Lighting

A NEW folder has been issued by the Kohler Company (Kohler, Wis.) on its emergency lighting system. While the contents consist to a considerable extent in references to installations made and the desirability of dependable emergency lighting for theatres, as well as other establishments, the folder, which has four pages, comprehensively describes the well known Kohler equipment in both text and pictures, while the issue is further commended by an attractive use of color and linen-finish stock.

Kohler lighting equipment is made in five sizes from 800 watts to 10 kilowatts, and in both automatic and manual models. The booklet gives complete specifications, with illustrations, of an A. C. and D. C. model.

Dry Type Transformers

TRANSFORMERS of special application to establishments in which space limitations or insurance regulations prevent the use of oil-insulated apparatus, form the subject of a new booklet just issued by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company (Sharon, Pa., and Emeryville, Call., works). The line comprises designs from 1/10-kv.a. to 50-kv-a., inclusive, with two types of construction, totally enclosed and ventilated.

The booklet describes the complete line in detail, with halftone illustrations, besides diagrammatic line drawings. Ordering information is elaborately given in table form. Westinghouse sales offices, agent-jobbers and service shops throughout the country are also listed.

The booklet is printed on enamel stock, and there are 12 pages, including the covers.

Theatre Misnamed

BETTER THEATRES has been asked by the Celotex Company to publish the following statement correcting an error in copy furnished for the Acousti-Celotex advertisement in the issue of March 14:

"In the March 14th issue of BETTER THEATRES, the caption to an illustration of a theatre interior in an Acousti-Celotex advertisement was incorrectly headed 'Patterson Theatre, Baltimore, Md.' This picture was of the Bridge theatre in the same city.

"Three Baltimore theatres—the Bridge, the Patterson, and the Edgewood—were designed by Architect John J. Zink, of Baltimore."

failure to complete the building within the time specified in the contract, because he had failed to transact the business in writing with the architect pertaining to the alterations and the desired extension of time.

The court held the contractor not liable for payment of liquidated damages for delay in completing the building, but held that he was entitled to payment for the extras, and said:

"One may not by a course of conduct induce another to act upon the understanding that there is a waiver of strict performance, thereby obtain an advantage or benefit and repudiate liability for fair compensation by invoking the terms of the contract. To do so is inequitable."

II

Building Permits

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a zoning ordinance is deemed valid and enforceable, unless the complaining party proves that its restrictions are unreasonable. For instance, in Quardt vs. Public (142 Atl. 435), it was shown that an owner of land engaged an architect to prepare plans and specifications for the erection of a building. These plans were submitted to and approved by the municipal board. The owner then applied to the building inspector for a permit to construct the building. The building inspector and Board of Adjustment refused to grant the permit in view of a city ordinance which precluded the erection of this kind of building in the zone known as "the small volume residential district."

The owner carried the case to the higher court, but failed to prove that the ordinance was unreasonable. This court sustained the verdict previously rendered, saying:

"There was no evidence offered in the present case before the Board of Adjustment to the effect that the provisions of the zoning ordinance were unreasonable. The presumption is that they are reasonable. This court will not disturb the action of a Board of Adjustment unless its action is shown by evidence to be wrong."

Need for Caution

IT IS WELL settled that theatre owners should exercise great care before beginning the construction of a theatre building, and be assured that the tribunal or person who has authority to issue a permit to construct the building has proper power and authority.

For example, in Smith vs. Kearney Zoning Board of Appeals (143 Atl. 151), it was disclosed that the owner of land applied to the superintendent of buildings for a permit to erect a building. The permit was refused upon the contention that the land was located in a district restricted to one-family residences under a zoning ordinance.

On April 12th, the owner appealed this decision to the Zoning Board of Appeals. The men comprising this board, after reviewing the facts of the case, reversed the superintendent's decision and granted a permit to the owner of the land to erect the building.

After the permit had been issued and the owner had expended about $2,500 toward foundation work for the building, the controversy was taken to the higher court on another appeal on the contention that the Zoning Board of Appeals, that granted the building permit, had been automatically abolished by a statute enacted on April 3rd.

The higher court held the permit issued by the Zoning Board of Appeals void, whereby the owner was prevented from completing the building.

Also, in the leading case of Leech vs. Campbell & Duncan (142 Atl. 364), it was disclosed that a man owning a tract of land and desiring to erect a building thereon, submitted plans and specifications to the building commission of his city who approved the same and issued a permit.

After the owner had entered into contracts with contractors and had begun the construction of the building, the township committee revoked the permit and referred the matter to the Board of Adjustment.

The property owner appealed to the court contending that a permit once granted and acted upon cannot be revoked, particularly if the owner expends money in good faith relying upon the validity of the permit. However, the court refused to grant the permit.

Yet, it is important to know that in London vs. Robinson (271 Pac. 921), after an owner of a lot had secured a building permit, adopted plans and specifications, and entered into a contract with a contractor for the erection of a building, the city then passed an ordinance which made it unlawful to construct the building in the selected location.

Although the lower court ordered the owner not to complete the building, the higher court reversed this verdict and quoted the law on the subject, as follows:

"Zoning regulations ordinarily have no retroactive effect unless the authorizing legislation specifically so states. By force of statute or ordinance zoning regulations may not have the effect of revoking permits for buildings granted prior to their adoption."

Zoning Law Interpretation

IT IS WELL established law that zone ordinances, which restrict the construction of theatre buildings in certain sections, are valid and enforceable. However, such laws will be construed reasonably to effect the intention of the framers of the law.

For illustration, in the late case of Reed vs. Board of Standards and Appeals (174 N. E. 301), it was shown that a municipal ordinance restricted the erection of theatre buildings in a residential section. The ordinance, also, provided that a Board of Appeals may after giving public notice and hearing use their own discretion in varying the application of the ordinance in harmony with its general purpose and intent.

A property owner applied for a permit to erect a theatre building on a corner. It was discovered that a portion of the proposed theatre, as designed, would extend 25 feet on one street and 19 feet on the other street in a district which, by provision of the ordinance, was restricted exclusively for residences.

Certain citizens objected to issuance of the building permit, but the board decided that the property owner was entitled to receive a permit for erection of the theatre building, notwithstanding the fact that a portion of the structure would extend into a residential zone. The higher court upheld the verdict of the Board, and said:

"Conditions deemed suitable by the Board were adopted to safeguard and preserve the general character of the neighborhood and to minimize the inconvenience of having the theatre extend beyond the line of business use. . . . The Board has a wide scope in the exercise of its discretion whenever the discretion to make variances is granted to it. . . . As matter of law, it cannot be said that the action of the Board permitting the extension of the proposed theatre into the more restricted district is without evidence to support it."

III

Building Contracts

IT IS WELL settled that if for any ordinary reason a theatre owner fails to fulfill his part of a building or repair contract, the contractor is legally entitled to discontinue further work and sue to recover the profit he may have earned had the theatre owner not breached the contract.

For instance, in the late case of Hamilton vs. Stephens (215 N. W. 321), it was disclosed that a firm of contractors contracted to perform certain construction work. The contract provided that the owner of the property should pay the contractors' weekly pay roll as part payment on the contract price. The contractors had performed 50 per cent of the work when the owner refused to meet a weekly pay roll. The contractors immediately discontinued further work and sued the property owner for breach of the contract claiming anticipated profits. It is interesting to observe that the court held the owner liable, stating the following important law:

"If he did not have just ground for terminating the contract, he may still terminate it, but, if he does terminate it under those conditions, then he is liable for any damages that result to the plaintiffs (contractors) as a result of his termination of the contract without cause."

Breach of Contract

CONVERSELY, it is well established that a contractor who breaches a contract is liable in damages to the theatre owner, and in many instances he is not entitled to payment for the work completed when the breach occurred.

For example, in Mitchell vs. Holomon (120 So. 672), a contractor entered into a contract with the owner of a lot, whereby the former agreed to construct a theatre for a stipulated sum. Soon after the construction work had begun and the frame of the building was partly completed the contractor abandoned the work without good cause.

The theatre owner sued the contractor to recover an amount equal to the payments which he had made, plus damages sustained as a result of the contractor's breach.

The contractor contended that he was entitled to payments for the labor and material he had furnished in completing the portion of the building before he had breached the contract. However, the court held the owner entitled to recover damages from the contractor and refused to allow the contractor any payment for the partly completed work.

Measure of Damages

VARIOUS courts have consistently held that where a contractor's completed work is reasonably adapted for the purposes for which it is intended, and the defects are such as may be remedied at a reasonable expense without materially interfering with the rest of the structure, the proper measure of damages for which the contractor is liable is the actual expenses necessary to make the work conform with the plans and specifications.

On the other hand, it is important to know that where the defect is a radical deviation from the original contract and repairs may still leave the finished work quite different from the plans and specifications, the situation is changed. In other words, where the defects can be remedied only by reconstructing a substantial portion of the building, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the building, as constructed by the contractor, and what its value would have been if the contractor had constructed the building in accordance with the plans and specifications.

Mechanic's Liens

Priority of Lien

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a mechanic's lien is prior to a mortgage, if the work is started before the mortgage on the property is recorded. For illustration, in Lawrence vs. Wright (124 So. 697), it was disclosed that a seller sold to a contractor material to be used in the construction of a building. Before the building was completed, but after the first load of material was delivered on the grounds, the owner of the property mortgaged it.

Later the property owner failed to pay for the material. The seller filed a mechanic's lien and duly recorded it. The holder of the mortgage contended that for the reason that the building contract was not recorded his mortgage was prior to the lien. However, the court held the lien prior to the mortgage.

Also, in Miller vs. Dean (29 S. W. [2d] 736), it was disclosed that a person held a mortgage on a building. The owner of the building, without consent of the holder of the mortgage, contracted to have the building torn down and a new one constructed. It was agreed that the contractor should use a part of the material from the old building. After the job was completed the contractor filed a lien against the property to secure payment. In this case the court held the lien enforceable not to exceed the difference between the values of the property before and after the new building was completed. This court said:

"The fact remains that, after the old structure was torn down, then the only security the mortgagee had for his loan was the land and the salvage. . . . An improvement was erected which had not theretofore existed and which added a value to the land. This being true, we think the general rule should be applied which gives priority to the liens of mechanics and materialmen upon the improvement, but not upon the land. . . . It must be held that the mortgagor (owner) had no right to contract for a lien superior to the lien upon the salvage without the consent of the mortgagee. . . . We must hold that the lien of the holder of the mortgage upon the improvement is superior to the liens of mechanics and materialmen only to the extent of the value of the salvage that was actually used in erecting the improvement."

Filing Mechanic's Liens

ALL STATES have enacted laws specifying the time after completion of a construction job, when a mechanic's lien must be filed. A lien properly filed within this period always is valid. So held the higher court in the case of Western Co. vs. Fisher (273 Pac. 19). The facts of the case are that a property owner made a contract with a contractor who believed he had completed his work and left the job on May 6. On July 5, at the request of the owner, the contractor sent his workmen to repair certain defects in the construction of the building. When the owner failed to pay the contract price, the contractor filed a mechanic's lien on August 10, within the statutory period of ninety days from July 5.

The owner contended that the contractor had forfeited his right to a lien because he had failed to file it within 90 days from the day the job was first completed, which he argued was on May 6. However, the contractor contended that the job was not completed until on July 5, the day he had finished making the necessary repairs. The higher court held the lien valid.

Also, in another leading case, Stidger vs. McPhee (15 Colo. App. 252), a higher court held a construction job to be uncompleted until a slight change was made in a door. This court said that an owner who demands a contractor to make changes based on the contract cannot later complain and say that the work was completed before the final changes, alterations or repairs required in the contract were completed.

Purpose of Lien Laws

THE POLICY of the lien law is to protect material men, subcontractors and laborers against loss for labor done and materials furnished in building, repairing, or altering any house or other improvement on real estate, to the extent of the balance due the original contractor at the time notice is given to the owner of the property.

It is important to know that a material man always is entitled to recover payment from a theatre owner who makes payments to a contractor after the material man sends notification to the theatre owner that the contractor owes a balance for building materials. This important rule of the law is applicable although the contractor performed work and used the materials after notice was sent to the theatre owner by the material man.

For instance, in Beeson Company vs. Burtner (155 S. E. 733), it was disclosed that on December 20, a material man sent notification to an owner that the contractor owed money for materials used in the construction work. Afterward the contractor performed other work, and the owner did not retain the amount due the contractor. In holding the material man's lien effective with respect to all money due the contractor from the date notice was sent, the court said:

"It is immaterial whether the contractor had been paid up in full for work done to the time notice was filed by the material man. The fact that he continued the work under the same contract will make the fund thereafter earned subject to the material man's lien. . . . The fact that the work for which these payments were made was done after notice is immaterial. The work was done by the contractor, under the contract, and the payments were made for this work."

When Owner Need Not Pay for Building Material

UNDER ORDINARY circumstances a theatre owner is obligated to pay for all materials, utilized to improve his property, except such material that the contractor purchases without knowledge or authority of the owner.

For example, in a late case 156 S. E. 87, it was disclosed that a material man furnished stone to a contractor who used it in construction work. After the property owner had accepted the structure and paid the contractor it was learned that the latter had failed to pay for the stone. The material man sued the owner on the contention that the law implies that a property owner will pay a reasonable amount for all materials used to improve his property.

However, the court refused to hold the owner required to pay for the stone, because it was shown that the owner had not authorized the contractor to purchase it.

Accessories for Music and Sound Reproducing Devices

ACCESSORIES for music and sound reproducing devices are many and varied. This comparatively new phase of the motion picture business has brought new demands upon the theatre. In the word "theatre" are included the exhibitor and the projectionist. These new phases of theatre operation must be studied, and included in the product necessary to operation of such equipment are: Pick-ups, motors, needle cups and covers, automatic stops, headsets, turntables, volume controls (rheostats), electric filter, amplifiers (power packs), radio tubes, loud speaker units, speakers (magnetic or electro-dynamic), horns (exponential), rotometers, stroboscopic discs, cabinets and cabinet hardware. A well balanced set is imperative and for such a set there are equipment requirements which cannot be overlooked.

There has also been brought out a rectifying device for use with the exciter lamp on the projector. This device eliminates the use of batteries or rectifiers for supplying D. C. current to the filament of the lamp. It consists of a transformer, chokes and condensers, and uses Argon gas tubes for the rectifying unit.

Accounting Systems

BOOKKEEPING systems taking into consideration specific requirements of the theatre have been developed to care for the operation of motion picture houses. These may be had either in loose leaf form or in solid book form covering an entire year's operation. These systems are designed to cover fully receipts and disbursements, film used, tickets sold, etc., and enable the exhibitor to check with promptness and accuracy his daily, weekly business or the business for the year. Acoustical Products and Engineering

PROPER acoustics is today a subject of outstanding importance in motion picture theatres. The introduction of sound films has necessitated the establishment of a more exact standard of acoustics than was necessary when motion picture theatres simply had the acoustical problem involved in orchestral and incidental music, because speech demands a more exact acoustical condition than music. In addition, the use of sound films made possible a range of volume never before possible, and made it necessary as well to reproduce carefully very shade and inflection of the human voice. New types of speakers, special sound screens, etc., add to the problem.

An auditorium that is faulty in acoustical properties is incapable of being used with any degree of satisfaction for sound films. Due also to the limitations of the recording and reproducing apparatus it is essential that the acoustical properties of the theatre in which sound films are reproduced shall aid in the quality of the reproduction rather than introduce added distortion and confusion. The problem of acoustics in auditoriums has been reduced to a science, and proper acoustics may be built into new theatres or provided in existing theatres through a proper study of theatre design and the use of interior finishes which have the qualities that control sound. Extensive research within the past few years has produced types of interior finish which combine the desirable acoustical characteristics with excellent decorative possibilities. These materials have an architectural flexibility of standard at least approximating that of interior finishes.

The problem of acoustics in theatres has resulted in special consideration of them by certain manufacturers who have established special departments, headed by experts, to cooperate with theatre owners and architects in the acoustical treatment of theatre buildings.

Act Announcers

to the act announcer. Naturally, in new houses these should be installed during construction so that they will harmonize with the interior design. In remodeling, suitable designs may be obtained for the decorative scheme decided upon. Act announcers are either automatically or hand controlled, with the automatic ones controlled remotely or from the stage. The general principle of the act announcer may be successfully used in window display promotion for the announcing of current and forthcoming bills. Such mechanism must be automatically operated.

One is known as the typewriteable address card system which may be prepared on a typewriter, and the other is the embossing of names and addresses on metal plates. Exhibitors will find that addressing machines may be purchased on time, and will be given demonstrations without cost or obligation. Addressing machines may be purchased as low as $20.

Advertising Films

THEATRE publicity assumes many forms and the alert exhibitor utilizes each at some time or other to suit the occasion. One of the most effective forms is the publicity film, which may be presented as a local news reel, a trailer, a presentation, a leader, a playlet, etc. In some cases as many as ten such films are run, giving the exhibitor advertising for his own business or an income from the charge he makes for thus advertising other businesses.

Advertising Novelties

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. A popular children's matinee stunt can be obtained by giving away a variety of novelty toys. These can be had in boxes containing 100 toys ranging in value from 5c to 15c at a cost of $3.00.

Air Conditioning and Cooling Equipment

AIR entering the theatre where air conditioning equipment is used is cleansed and humidified by a process of passing the air through fine sprays of water which removes from it dust and other dirt as well as obnoxious odors and gases. Systems of this type are generally referred to as "air washers."

There is also a system known as the "cataract type," in which the water descends from a distributing tank over a series of baffle plates.

The air is drawn in from the outside and then passed over heating coils so that it will not cause freezing of the water in the air washer. These coils are called tempering coils. The air then passes through a mist of water caused by a number of spray nozzles that create a dense fog, removing dust, odors, gases, etc. The air absorbs moisture from the spray and is cooled thereby. It then passes through a series of sheet iron baffles that remove all suspended and entrained moisture. The air next passes through the bank of heating coils that raise its temperature to the desired degree. From here it is distributed through a proper system of ducts to various parts of the theatre.

Aisle Lights

AISLE lights should be installed on every sixth chair standard in sigzag fashion along aisle. Lights are placed at sufficient height from floor to properly illuminate same without disturbing reflection to screen or audience. 10-watt lamps are generally used. Practically all theatres today are installing aisle lights as a protection and convenience to patrons. In recent months a number of instances have been noted where aisle lights have been cast as part of the chair standard itself, the practice being carried out in the more elaborate theatres when the chairs are built to certain decorative specifications. Aisle lights sell for about $4.00 each, the price decreasing for quantities.

Anchors for Chairs

THESE are expansion shell bolts used for anchoring theatre seats to the floor. They are made in several types. Type No. 1 is used with a carriage bolt and is inserted in the hole and set with a small setting tool before placing the chair in its final position. This tool is furnished without extra charge. The No. 2 type is used with a square head machine bolt which has been specially heat treated to prevent any possibilities of stripping the threads when drawn up tightly with a socket wrench. This type No. 2 is attached to the leg of the chair before placing the chair in position. The method of application is to insert the bolt through the hole in the leg of the chair and turn the expansion shell far enough up on the bolt so that it comes in contact with the under surface of the chair leg. This small amount of friction prevents the shell from turning around. The shells will withstand the constant vibration of raising and lowering the chair seats, as well as the motion and hard usage they must necessarily stand when the seat is occupied. The shells are furnished to the user complete, consisting of the expansion shells together with a washer and whatever style or length of bolt the customer may specify. Different makes of chairs take different lengths of bolts, and stock is carried to cover this variation. Bolts range from 1¾ inches to 3 inches in length.

Arc Regulators

AS THE NAME implies the arc regulator regulates the voltage at the arc through automatic feeding as the carbon is consumed and the gap between the carbons increases. The result of this automatic action is a steady light on the screen pronounced superior to that which it is possible to produce by hand. The arc control, as it is frequently called, feeds the carbons in an even manner. This equipment sells for about $125.

Architectural Service

IN PLANNING a motion picture theatre, the services of a competent theatre architect are recommended. Such service may be comprehensive or limited according to the nature and size of the project. For example, an architect may be called upon to furnish complete plans and specifications for a theatre and the work of building a house let to a local contractor. In such cases, where the architect's supervision is not arranged for, the cost of complete plans and specifications is 3 per cent of the cost of the project. On this basis the cost of plans and specifications for a $50,000 theatre, for example, would be $1,500.

Hot Weather will soon be with us

Have you concerned yourself with the comfort of your patrons when the dog days arrive? Have you considered making your theatre a year round profit paying proposition, or will you sit back and watch the crowds swarm into the cooled, comfortable houses?

Why not let us make a survey of your house and tell you how much it will cost to install a cooling plant. There are no obligations whatever. This service is free. There are no strings attached to this offer.

Our list of over 150 air cooling installations rates us among the leaders in this field. We are thoroughly capable and reliable and our equipment and our methods are endorsed by the leading architects and engineers.

"SALESMEN IN EVERY STATE"

The regular architect's commission as established by the American Institute of Architects, in which the architect renders full supervision throughout the construction period is 6 per cent. The architect's fee for plans and specifications, usually results in a saving in various materials and labor which more than compensates for the cost of the plans, it has been found. His plans provide a safeguard against a building which might prove unsatisfactory from many angles if designed by someone who is not familiar with the special requirements of theatres. It should be remembered that a theatre is a highly specialized type of building. Even the architect who may be successful in designing factories, warehouses and industrial buildings of other types is not equipped to give an understanding to theatre problems which may be expected of the architect who has given this particular type of building an almost exclusive attention.

The hazard of trusting the design of a theatre to a local contractor, therefore is readily apparent. He can usually be relied upon to perform satisfactorily the constructional work but the plans for the theatre require expert understanding if the completed job is to be successful and profitable.

For a complete list of architects refer to page 143.

Artificial Flowers and Plants

MANY PLACES in the theatre may profitably be made beautiful through the use of art plants and flowers. The lobby, foyer, auditorium walls and organ grill offer excellent places for such use. Many theatres are capitalizing the seasonal rejuvenation it is possible to achieve in the house through the use of plants and flowers. Much progress has been made recently in the manufacture of beautiful art flowers, plants and trees of all kinds. Not only do art plants and flowers provide a natural beauty in the theatre but they may advantageously be used in brightening dark corners and barren spaces.

Sound equipment in theatres has turned the orchestra pit of most houses into a dead spot. This can be overcome by the installation of a lawn and garden effect.

Banners and Posters (Hand-Painted)

DUE TO IMPROVED workmanship and quality of product theatre advertising by means of hand painted banners has gained renewed vogue in the past few years. Banners in many colors are now available on heavy poster paper, on muslin and in the form that is known as regular paper banners. The usual sizes of these banners are 32 or 36 inches wide by 10 feet. Muslin banners are made in the same width running any length the cost being around 25 cents per foot. The paper and heavy poster banners about 3x10 feet cost about 50 cents each. The banners are painted in oil color and are waterproof. A variety of colors may be included. All banners may be artistically air-brushed at no additional cost.

In addition to the straight lettered banners, illustrated banners are sometimes desired for big attractions. Banners range in cost from 25 cents per foot up.

Batteries

BATTERIES FORM important units of sound reproducers and are generally furnished by the manufacturer with the sound apparatus. Non-synchronous devices do not use them, but synchronous methods must have them in order to eliminate the hum of the alternating current. Any standard make of batteries can be used, but it is always best to use the make furnished or recommended by the manufacturer of the sound apparatus.

Another important use of batteries in motion picture theatres is in emergency lighting systems which augment the regular source of light power as a safeguard against breakdown of the local system. They are installed for instant service upon such a breakdown, being placed in operation automatically. Besides giving the necessary power for lighting, they are capable also of affording the projector motors power for some time. Prices depend on the nature of the installation.

Bell and Buzzer Signal Systems

PERFECT CONTINUITY of the performance depends upon bell, buzzers and signal systems. The projection room and the stage and the managers office keep in constant touch with each other by various systems of signaling, and only by these means can coordination exist. The ushers have means of signaling the doorman or director as to which part of the house to send patrons, and the ushers are informed by a seat indicating device where and how many seats are empty or filled.

Bronze and Iron Work, Ornamental

THE THEATRE today cannot be shoddy in appearance. Everything visible to the eye of the patron must be colorful and artistic—the organ grilles, all metal work on doors, railings, wickets, metal accoutrements in men's smoking rooms and women's rest rooms, etc. This bronze and iron work may be artistic in its plainness, or in the elaborateness of its design and mould, or again in the severity of the modernistic tone. Grilles can be made in any design or size, and one can also obtain bronze ticket booths and lobby frames.

Bulletin Boards, Changeable

CHANGEABLE BULLETIN boards, which come under this heading involve the use of a grooved board on which are placed white enameled brass letters, white enameled die cast aluminum letters or white or red celluloid letters of various sizes as may be desired to work out an attractive announcement. The background of the board is usually covered with a dark broadcloth surrounded by a frame in mahogany or extruded cast bronze. The letters are hung in the horizontal grooves of the board and the announcement accomplished through placing of the letters in their most advantageous manner. These changeable bulletin boards are made in various sizes ranging from 10 inches by 6 inches to large boards.

Many theatres have adopted signs of this type for use in the lobby in announcing coming and present attractions. In fact the ease with which announcements may be set up or changed gives these bulletin boards a wide range of use in the motion picture house.

Also used on bulletin boards, but particularly adapted also for marquise signs, to announce the current attraction, are letters of raised opal glass mounts in oxi-

Cable, Motion Picture

MOTION PICTURE cable and other asbestos insulated wires occupy an important place in theatres, being extensively used in the projection room for the projectors, for spot and flood lights, switchboards, motor and grid resistance leads and the like. The two important features of motion picture cable are flexibility and immunity to flame and heat. Owing to the intense heat and possible danger from fire in projection booths the conductor must have the finest kind of insulation. Because of the necessity for constant changes of position for floods and arcs the cable must be very flexible and tough enough to endure wear. Prices range from 5 cents to 25 cents per foot.

Canopies, Theatre

USE OF ARTISTIC canopies by motion picture theatres is growing in popularity among houses of all sizes. A canopy serves a number of practical purposes. They offer theatres an excellent advertising medium while giving to the house an attractive and inviting entrance. During inclement weather they offer protection to waiting patrons.

Canopies are usually constructed of sheet metal and may be obtained in a variety of designs. They are furnished with glass roof or with steel ceiling and metal roof. Numerous interesting standard designs have been developed by marquise manufacturers especially for theatre use. These are easily installed and are shipped to theatres in convenient sections. Suggestions for attractive designs are available. Inquiries should be accompanied by approximate measurements of the front of the building where the canopy is to be used.

Not only are practically all of the new theatres being erected installing marquees but they are being exclusively used in the remodeling of the old houses, because of the effective manner in which they give to the theatres a new and pleasing appearance at small cost. Prices of canopies range from $300 up.

Carbons

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons might possibly be considered one of the most staple products in the operation of the moving picture theatre.

There is no factor, indeed, which can claim any more attention in the successful operation of the theatre than the light which is used for projection, and quite a little depends on both the quantity and quality of projector carbons kept on hand in the projection booth.

Modern projection demands the best in quality in projection carbons today, and this demand is being met by the carbon manufacturers through their scientific and research departments with products that have kept pace with modern progress.

Carpets

BECAUSE of the hard wear to which theatre carpets are subjected it has been found that there is no saving in the selection of cheap carpets. The heavier and deeper the nap the more life may be expected of a carpet. Generally, floor coverings and carpets should be of a nature that rest on the floor and give the impression of stability and foundation upon which one may walk with security. A carpet that is fussy, light in color and overdecorated has a tendency to give the impression that it is not resting—but rather floating. Obviously this is an unfavorable impression. Carpet padding used under the carpet not only provides a softer and more comfortable feeling to the foot but reduces friction and adds many years to the life of the carpet by keeping it away from direct contact with the hard floor.

Carpets also should be selected with a view to the acoustics of the theatre.

Carpet Cushioning

IN THEATRES, where continuous coming and going of patrons subjects the carpets in aisles, stairs and foyers to unusual wear a cushioning under the carpets has been found to add many years to their life. In addition to this practical advantage carpet cushioning gives a delightful sensation of richness and luxury which is important in creating a desirable atmosphere in the theatre. Carpet cushioning is a product made of finely combed, tufted vegetable fibre interlaced through a burlap backing or of animal hair felted under pressure. It is made in thicknesses varying from ¼ to ¾ of an inch. Carpet cushioning also has a bearing upon acoustics.

Chairs, Theatre

TO EQUIP a theatre properly, the first requirement is a thorough understanding of the uses to which the building is to be put. Having determined that, a seating diagram or layout should be made to insure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper sight lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments.

The arrangement and width of aisles and passageways should be such that transient patrons may move about with a minimum of disturbance to those who are seated. For this reason, the number of seats in each row between aisles should be kept as low as is possible and consistent with the desired seating capacity. It is well to have not more than ten or twelve seats in a row between each aisle, although this number may, if necessary, be increased slightly. Many theatres, however, have established a maximum of fourteen seats.

The distance between rows varies between 30 and 32 inches. Experience has demonstrated that this distance is necessary to accommodate all sizes of patrons, and to facilitate entering and leaving the center seats of a row while others are seated.

In planning the seats for a theatre, it is a safe policy to plan for the accommodation of persons who are above the average in size, since seating that is too large does not produce discomfort. In the larger theatres, therefore the majority of the seats are 20 inches wide with an occasional 19-inch chair to fill in. An exception to this ruling is the seating for loges, which frequently is as much as 24 inches wide.

Every patron is entitled to a direct and open vision of the stage. Sloping and terracing of floor and the curvatures of the balcony are, of course, intended to facilitate this, but unless the seats are specially made to meet the requirements of each and every part of the house, these avail but little. For so greatly do theatres vary in plan and design that the seating construction problem must be solved individually in each instance.

The relative length of chair legs, both front and back, must be so adjusted as to conform evenly to the slope of the floor and still keep the chair in its normal position. Then the occupant is assured of a natural, easy and comfortable position in sitting. He is neither tilted too far forward nor too far back. His feet and those of the chair should rest very naturally in exactly the same line or plane.

Where there are sloping sides toward the center, a two-fold problem presents itself. Not only must the inclination toward the front be right, but there must be a mechanical adjustment in the fastening of the seats to standards, so that the seats will be perfectly level and parallel with the natural floor level and the sitter will not be tilted at an angle.

The necessary converging of seats from the outer circumference toward the stage, both on the main floor and in the balconies, is another problem. There must be no loss of chair space and resultant decreased capacity, but the symmetry and a general pleasing and orderly appearance must be preserved.

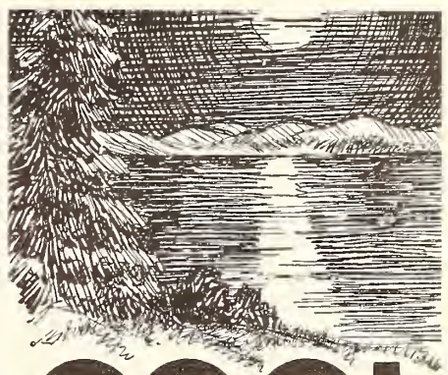
The placing of chairs in rows and the arrangement of the aisles, to make ingress and egress as easy, speedy and safe as possible and to conform in every way with the building and fire ordinance of each community, is another important point requiring careful thought and planning.

Frequently, a very simple rearrangement makes possible an appreciable increase in house capacity, and if not in actual increased numerical capacity, actual increased box office receipts by transforming otherwise less desirable and less valuable seats to a higher grade of valuation and desirability.

Almost equally as important as proper arrangement of the chairs themselves, is the quality, comfort and service they will give. The element of comfort is an especially outstanding consideration as the ability to provide rest and ease for the audience during the performance augurs for more solid enjoyment of the show. Roominess, correct springs, smooth, well upholstered back, correctly placed arm rests, a perfectly level placing with the floor, serviceable hat holders, smoothly operating and noiseless seat-hinges—these are but a few of the things that go to make up a comfortable theatre chair.

Strength, stability, durability must be embodied in every chair. A broken seat, while apparently not of great importance in itself, is nevertheless an annoyance that reflects unfavorably on the theatre as a whole.

Talking pictures have injected another element into the problem of seating for higher efficiency, i. e., acoustics. The acoustical properties of the theatre chair are now very important, and for sound-equipped houses upholstered seats have become a necessity due to their sound-absorbent quality. Veneer backs and seats are likely to induce sound reverberation of obnoxious character and may easily mar an otherwise perfect acoustical condition. Therefore, in the selection of seating facilities, the subject of acoustics must now be given most serious consideration.



Veneer chairs range in price from $3.75 to $6.00. Upholstered chairs are from $6.00 up.

Chair Covers

IN ADDITION to giving a pleasing and inviting appearance to the auditorium, chair covers serve the practical purpose of coolness and sanitation. An interior otherwise drab may be transformed into a cool, clean, cheerful looking place through their use.

Theatre chair covers have been used extensively in dramatic and larger motion picture houses but it is only recently that they have been adopted on a greater scale by the smaller houses. No doubt one of the causes has been the belief that they were an expensive proposition. This, however, is not the case. Recently chair covers have been developed which are reversible, effecting an important saving in laundering costs. There are several things that should be borne in mind in connection with the use of chair covers. It should be remembered that auditorium and balcony chairs as a rule require two distinct and different styles of covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back while the balcony chair need only have a quarter back. This is because of the slope on which balcony chairs are placed.

Chair Fastening Cement

CEMENT of this kind is for firmly attaching into the floor the metal pieces to which the theatre chair is bolted. Into a hole made in the floor, the metal piece itself, or bolt for its attachment, is inserted, then around it is poured the melted cement. In about ten minutes this cement hardens and holds the metal piece or bolt firmly in place.

When used in reseating, the old metal piece or bolt is removed, a new one inserted and the cement poured around it. Such cement can be procured for around $7.50 per 12-pound can.

Chairs, Folding

THE FOLDING CHAIR, solidly constructed, plays an important role in the theatre today. With presentation and the stageband, and the need for compactness behind the scenes, the folding chair serves manifold purposes. The durability of this type of chair as made today adds to its value as a stage requisite. Many very small theatres likewise find the folding chair suitable owing to the frequent necessity of clearing the auditorium floor for other forms of entertainment. The folding chair combines neatness, durability and practicability.

Change Makers

SPEED AND ACCURACY are obtained at the box office through the use of coin changing machines which in addition to their time saving facilities offer a valuable protection against annoying mistakes in making change to patrons. With the coin changing machines a light touch at the keyboard is all that is necessary to deliver the correct number of coins to the patron who easily scoops them up from a cup at the side of the change maker. Coins may be delivered either from the right or left side and these automatic cashiers as developed for theatres have been improved in recent months until now they are available in sizes which occupy only about 81 square inches of space in the box office.

In the handling of crowds the coin changer plays a particularly important part in reducing to a minimum delay at the ticket window, and some are equipped with safety locks to prevent short changing when a channel is empty. Fumbling of coins and the dropping of them which is characteristic of the old fashioned method is eliminated.

Change makers sell for $125 and up.

Changeable Sign Letters

CHANGEABLE SIGN LETTERS are widely used by theatres in the marquee and have proved especially popular, because of the flexible manner in which they permit billing of a current or coming attraction. Changeable sign letters are generally made of cast aluminum with the letter part cut out. When used on the marquee these letters can be moved to make an attractive announcement. They are obtainable in large and small sizes and, in addition, numerals of the same character are also available.

Color Films

THERE HAVE been motion pictures in color for a number of years, but in 1929 was made the first feature picture entirely in color. This proved an added touch of realism to the sound picture, and at once color was incorporated in the production plans of most producers.

Most professional productions on standard film employ the process known as technicolor, a patented method consisting fundamentally in filtering out the blues, greens and reds in recording and superimposing them properly in printing. There are other processes less extensively used, including a two-color additive method.

A new process for amateur and semi-professional work was brought out in 1929 by the Eastman Kodak laboratories. Motion pictures in full natural colors in the 16-mm. size may be made by the use of Kodacolor film and by the addition of a Kodacolor filter to the lens hood of the camera. Provided the light is adequate, the process is no more difficult than making black and white pictures, and projection is accomplished simply by adding a Kodacolor filter to the projector. Minute lenses embossed right on the film cause the colors to register separately and thus do the trick. Since duplicates can not be made from Kodacolor film, the process is still impractical for theatre productions.

Composition Flooring

MANY PARTS of a theatre especially call for a floor covering other than woven materials, and often composition flooring may adequately take the place of expensive tiles, terrazzo, etc. Indeed, in some of the most elegant theatres, the new types of composition flooring, which is now made in raised sections and patterns suggestive of tile and other kinds of mineral flooring, have been effectively adopted.

Composition flooring is made by a number of companies specializing in this product, and all have their own processes. It may be said, however, that the basic materials are cork or rubber, and natural gums. For the coloring is added color pigments according to the design. The resulting mass is attached to burlap backing. Composition flooring comes in varying thicknesses, depending on the use to which it is to be put, and it may be especially designed.

mostly in motion picture work. The condenser is located in the front end of the lamphouse to gather the rays of light from the light source, and bend them, or condense them into a spot of light on the aperture. They are made in different shapes, some being Plano Convex some Meniscus or Moon shape and others Bi-Convex.

Condenser breakage and trouble has been greatly reduced through the perfection and development of heat resisting glass which is tempered and processed to withstand extreme changes of temperature. This, it is declared, has been accomplished without any sacrifice of light on the screen and without impairment of photographic values.

Focal lengths for motion picture work are usually 6½-7½-8½ and 9½ inches; 5 inches, 6 inches and 8 inches diameter condensers are usually used for spotlight projection.

Within the last two years there has been a development of what is known as the Parabolic condenser, which has made possible the gathering of more light, and a sharp, concentrated spot on the aperture of the picture machine. These Parabolic condensers have been developed for regular arc projection, high intensity arc projection, and mazda projection. They are a little more expensive than the regular type of condenser, but the results obtained are well worth the price. Prices from $1.50 to $12.

Cooling, Ventilating Systems

CAPABLE OF delivering 35,000 cubic feet of fresh air per minute into every part of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems are being adopted by theatres of all sizes. Systems of this type are reasonably priced, ranging in cost from $100 upward.

They may be installed in various parts of the theatre, a common place being below the stage. Under this arrangement distribution of the air is upward, the air passing to the rear of the auditorium and dropping naturally to every seat. In theatres having an organ installed at one side of the proscenium the opposite side of the proscenium affords a good place for a cooling unit. A pent house on the roof at the rear of the auditorium, or on an elevated platform eight or nine feet above the stage floor level, are other manners in which the system may be installed to assure excellent results. In fact, regardless of the nature of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems of this type may be readily adapted to it.

Manufacturers of this equipment maintain cooling and ventilating experts and offer a service of recommending the most efficient arrangement for the complete cooling and ventilating of a theatre. The systems may be installed without interruption to the regular performances.

Costumes and Costume Fabrics

COSTUMES and costume fabrics for the stage must meet many demands, and for that reason this is a specialized field. These fabrics must be of unusual textures for glittering display behind the footlights or in the spot. The costumes may represent a nation, a period or a class, and such costuming must be the work of a skilled costumer whose knowledge of peoples and periods is unlimited. The fine costume fabrics are both domestic and of foreign make. Costumes are made to order, sold outright, or provided on a rental basis.

Curtain Control Machines

FEW THINGS leave a finer impression on the theatre audience than the smooth and silent opening and closing of the curtain. This is accomplished by curtain control machines which operate automatically. The curtain can be controlled from the booth or from back stage by the simple process of pressing a button.

Curtain control equipment consists of track equipped with cable and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. In opening and closing the curtain may be stopped at any desired point across the stage and may also be reversed at will.

The motor for operating the curtain is usually placed on the stage or it may be placed in the grids or mounted on a platform. This permits the machine, track and curtains to be flied in addition to open from the center.

Theatres of all sizes are now employing automatic curtain control equipment and mechanism of this type has been developed to a high grade of efficiency, contributing immeasurably to audience enjoyment of the program. The price of curtain control machines is around $225 with the track selling at $3 per foot.

A type of curtain control machine specially designed for small theatres with tracks up to 40 feet in length, has been put on the market at a price considerably lower than that of the larger machines.

Curtain Tracks

THE TYPE of curtain track installed is important for several reasons. It cannot be a makeshift affair, for if it is it may ruin an otherwise good program. Naturally, it must be noiseless and must function smoothly and with little or no effort. A moving curtain attracts attention, therefore that motion must not be accompanied by vibration.

Decorating Products and Service

THE THEATRE today has opened a new field for the producer and designer of decorative materials. No other building is as complete in this sense as is the theatre, for in the decorative scheme the theatre has found a factor which encourages patronage. The blending colors, the unique wall designs, the finely cut or moulded grille pieces, modern lighting fixture designs, gorgeous drapes, etc., all lend themselves to the theatre.

Detergents

THEATRE REMODELING and rejuvenation go hand in hand with a general clean-up, to which houses are periodically subjected. In this connection cleaning compounds are available for use, not only for the exterior of the house, but for cleaning painted surfaces, marble, tile, terrazzo and mosaic. These latter materials, much in use in theatre buildings, may be brought back to a pleasing state of newness through the use of proper detergents.

Dimmers

THE BEAUTIFUL lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres is accomplished through dimmers which are capable of complete illumination control making possible soft changes and color blending of lights to create a restful and pleasing atmosphere. Dimmers are used by small theatres as well as the large motion picture palaces. They are usually placed at the side of the stage. In instances of smaller installations the dimmer may be operated by the projectionist from the booth.

The magical effect of lighting control and blending as achieved with dimmers is one of the outstanding features of the modern theatre today. On the stage and throughout the theatre dimmers give producers and managers one of their most effective means of creating marvelous effects which unquestionably are important factors at the box office.

Disinfectants, Perfumed

THE NECESSITY of eliminating disagreeable odors in a theatre has led to the development of disinfectants which not only serve to eradicate the odors but leave in the room a delightful perfume fragrance. Disinfectants of this kind are usually sprinkled about the house or they may be used in ornamental cones, placed on the auditorium walls. Particularly during the hot weather months are perfumed disinfectants used extensively to sweeten the air in the theatre and make it agreeable and comfortable. Disinfectants sell for $3.00 a quart and up.

Drinking Fountains

EIGHTEEN drinking fountains about evenly divided between the wall and pedestal type are installed in Balaban & Katz's Uptown theatre, Chicago. While the Uptown is one of the country's largest houses, the drinking water facilities provided easily emphasize the importance of this feature in any theatre.

Drinking fountains should be placed as conveniently as possible for the patron entering and leaving the theatre. In small houses at either end of foyer is a place frequently used. Whether the wall or pedestal type fountain is used depends upon space available, the wall type being used where space conditions are more limited. The wall type is designed with special decorative and illuminating features.

In the finer theatres drinking fountains form an integral part of the decorative scheme of the theatre, being designed in harmony with the balance of the surroundings and in conformity with the architectural treatment of the house.

Earphones

EARPHONES consist of sound receivers attached to head bands and means for connection of the receivers to the main sound system of a theatre so that persons who are hard of hearing may hear the sounds of the picture as well as a normal person. These systems for the hard-of-hearing have made the talking picture as much of a source of entertainment to the person with impaired hearing as the silent picture was before, and through the device, the partially deaf person has been retained as a patron of the motion picture theatre.

The usual method is to have certain seats adapted for the attachment of this special equipment, and upon request the earphones are plugged into a seat, while the patron has control through a small hand "fader" of the volume.

Electric Measuring Instruments

THE DEVELOPMENT and improvement in theatre lighting and projection have thrown onto the shoulders of the electrician, as well as the projectionist, many responsibilities. At their command are factors which make or break the show. With enormous switchboards to control, emergency lighting plants, motors, generators, arcs, dimmers, transverters, magnetic appliances and many other involved and sensitive electrical instruments, it devolves on the theatre to provide adequate equipment for their correct operation. In the list of necessary measuring instruments are ammeters, voltmeters, vacuum tube testers and the like. All these and others tend toward improving lighting.

Electric Pickups

ELECTRIC PICKUPS take the sound vibrations from records, transmit them to the amplifiers. The stylus (or needle) runs in a groove on the record and is caused to vibrate according to the groove made at the recording. On the phonograph this needle vibrates a diaphragm located in the neck of the horn, and these vibrations are amplified to audibility by the construction of the horn. Electric pickups are used to convert the mechanical energy picked up from the record by the stylus, which also is the armature of the reproducing unit. A fluctuating audio-frequency voltage is generated in the coil surrounding this armature, which is amplified either through the audio-amplifier (of the radio set) or through the amplifier of a public address or sound picture system.

Exit Light Signs

EXIT LIGHT SIGNS are required by law in all theatres, the Chicago theatre building ordinance specifying them as follows: "The word 'EXIT' shall appear in letters at least six inches high over the opening of every means of egress from a theatre and a red light shall be kept burning over such a sign."

Many improvements have been made in the manufacture of exit lights in an endeavor to make them less offensive in appearance without detracting from their practical mission. In addition to various styles, exit lights may be obtained built into ornamental fixtures, the whole being placed over the exit door.

Fans, Ventilating

FANS MAY BE divided into two classes, the portable and the stationary. The latter is the type commonly used in theatres. It is made in a variety of styles and sizes and is used for drawing into the auditorium fresh air or drawing out the foul air. These fans are mounted in a wall opening and in theatres can advantageously be placed in the front or rear of the auditorium and in the lobby. The motors operating these fans are usually supported by a bracket extension of the fan. The motor is generally enclosed to prevent trouble from dust or dirt.

The sizes of these fans range from 10 to 72 inches in diameter.

Ceiling fans are of a larger type and operate at slower speed. Fans of this type usually have four wooden blades and they are hung from the ceiling by an insulated hanger. The blower type of fan may be located over exits, under stage, at sides of projection booth and on roofs, either at front or rear.

While the importance of adequate ventilation in the auditorium is generally recognized it has been found that many theatres have failed in providing ventilation in lobbies. Air in the lobby, particularly when crowds are waiting admission soon becomes stagnant and foul, with the result that patrons are unduly wearied and placed in an unfavorable state for enjoying the entertainment. Prices range from $160 up. The blower type ranges from $250 up.

Some of them are constructed so that they can be ventilated to the outside by means of piping. The prices range from $4.00 to $60.00 per unit or cabinet.

Stop Losing Patronage

Because Of Oil-Soaked, Sweaty and Gritty Prints

Are your pictures clear, clean, noiseless, is the sound faithfully reproduced — or have you a dirty, spotted projection and annoying thunder-crashing sound, which is driving your critical patronage to other theatres, where only new prints are shown.

The easy gathering of dangerous grit upon oily and sweaty prints hinders perfect projection and sound, is ruinous not only to BOX OFFICE receipts, but rapidly makes good prints "junky."

WAXOLENE FILM PROCESS—operating in the laboratory and Film Exchanges, for processing new prints to safe-guard against sticking and scratching—for renewing brilliancy, pliability, toughness and for absorbing the accumulation of oil and sweat from prints—makes them fool-proof, with longer life and greater ease to eyes and ears of the theatre-goers.

FILM EXCHANGES—who continually remove oil and sweat from prints with the oil absorption method of WAXOLENE FILM PROCESS, eliminate the greatest evil that destroys perfect projection and reproduction of sound.

Theatres demanding WAXOLENE PROCESSED PRINTS, are always assured of receiving prints that will give perfect projection satisfaction.

Film Developing and Printing

WITH MOTION PICTURE presentations and local news reels offering novelty on many theatre bills, a great responsibility rests upon those developing and printing the films. Rapid service is required, yet the negatives and positives must be handled with meticulous care to avoid cloudiness, rain and other faults. Positives may be obtained in black and white and in several tints, including amber, red, etc.

Film Inspection Machines

PERFECT PROJECTION is impossible unless the film itself is in perfect mechanical condition. Today the public demands good screen and sound results and the projectionist can accomplish this only when proper inspection has been given to the film. The film inspection machines manufactured today are adding efficiency to this work.

Film, Raw

RAW FILM is motion picture film that has never been exposed. Camera spools carry 400 and 1,000 feet of negative film, and positive film can be got in 1,000-foot lengths. The positive film is that which is used to make a copy or print from the original film or negative.

Film Rewinders

THIS DEVICE is used for rewinding films after they are run through the projectors, and are made in two general patterns, the bench and fire-proof enclosed type. The bench or open rewind is made in one piece types with the dummy and geared end complete in one unit, and others are made so that they can be clamped to a bench or shelf, while some are permanently fastened by means of bolts. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings. They range in price from $5.00 to $15.00.

The enclosed rewinds are made in various patterns, both hand drive and motor drive models. The motor drive type is generally automatic in its operation, stopping at the end of the film or should the film break. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings. Some motor drive types also have multiple speed ranges and accommodate either one- or two-thousand-foot reels. One type recently brought on the market also has a detachable grinding and polishing attachment for aiding the operator in keeping his equipment in first class shape as well as keeping his arc lamp in good working order. The prices range from $50.00 to $160.00 complete.

Fire Prevention for Projectors

IMPORTANT equipment has been developed which it is said definitely prevents a film fire in the projection machine. This equipment is a safety control device, that is easily installed and which is operated on the regular line voltage. The main control unit and dowser are mounted on the cone of the lamphouse and act as the main light cut off, taking the place of the regular dowser. The dowser is operated from five distinct points of contact, covering every avenue through which a fire could start in the projector while it is in operation or at a standstill with the film in it. All contact points are very sensitive, and the dowser is instantaneous in its action, yet does not depend upon springs to actuate it.

An arm with a loop and idler are so mounted as to engage with the upper film loop, another arm and idler is so mounted to engage the lower loop, an auxiliary idler is mounted so that it rides the film between the take-up sprocket and lower magazine valve rollers. These three points of contact with the film offer protection against fire from the following causes: film break at any point in the projector; loss of lower loop; loss of upper loop; mutilated perforations, i. e.: perforations in such condition that film will not ride properly through projector; failure of film to pass properly through projector from any cause; failure of film to take-up properly; bad reel in lower magazine; take-up belt breaking.

Now there are other avenues by which a film fire can start, and the inventors of the device have apparently overlooked nothing in the way of safety.

The entire projector is protected by a governor which is driven by one of the gears of the projector head, and this causes the dowser to actuate in case the following occurs: drive belts breaking, projector head binding up, motor trouble of any kind, loose drive pulleys, line fuses blowing out, projector running below normal speed.

A very important feature of this control is the change-over, that is incorporated in it where two or more projectors are used, and it is very simple in its operation as it keeps one dowser in a locked position while the other one is in operating position.

The failure of current supply to motor results in instant actuation of the dowser.

Fireproof Doors

IN PRACTICALLY all states, cities and towns building codes require the use of fireproof doors in certain quarters of the theatre, such as the projection booth, stairwells, exits, dressing rooms, boiler rooms, etc. This demand on the part of the framers of the buildings codes has been beneficial to the theatre owner in many respects. In the first place it has effected a big saving in insurance. Secondly, and more important, it has safe-guarded life and eliminated legal battles and accident and death claims. Before building every theatre owner should consult building code specialists and the fire underwriters.

Fireproof Shutters

AGAIN ENTERING into lower insurance rates are fireproof shutters for the projection booth. Such equipment in the modern theatre has placed the patrons beyond the danger line, so to speak. These safety shutters are so constructed that they drop when film breaks. Certain designs work automatically, while others operate through a release effected by the projectionist. The list price of the shutters ranges from $9.00 up, depending on size.

Fireproof Units

THERE ARE various forms of these available and generally each type is made in several capacities and sizes to accommodate their installation in small or large booths. The component parts of each unit are generally detachable so that the unit can be made complete for film storage, waste disposal, film rewinding and inspection, as well as the storage of both supplies and tools. They are generally furnished with casters, so that they can be moved about for cleaning or relocating purposes. They are made entirely of metal and are therefore, fireproof. These units are far cheaper in the long run than the general makeshift of the past, in covering wooden benches or shelves with tin or sheet metal, since they always represent a recognized value by being complete within themselves, and not built in as part of the partitions or the booth construction. The prices range from $50.00 to $350.00.

THE SPARKLING life and motion characteristic of so many theatre signs is produced by the use of sign flashers. Sign flashers are made in several types, among them being the motor driven, the mercury contact, thermal and socket flasher type.

The possibilities for attention getting effects through the use of sign flashers is demonstrated daily in thousands of signs equipped with them. Signs employing flashers are generally used in connection with colored lamps or color hoods, the combined flasher and color lending itself to an almost endless interpretation of interesting figures and shapes.

In addition to the interest compelling action which the sign flasher injects in a sign, it is stated that its use effects a saving in current cost over the continuous burning sign. Prices range from $40.00 up.

Flood Lights

FLOOD LIGHTING is accomplished with a lamp equipped with reflector of parabolic form capable of projecting a light to cover a wide area at a distance. For night lighting of theatre buildings lamps usually range from 200 to 1,500 watts. These may be located on the marquise or at some other vantage point opposite or nearly opposite the building. The intensity of the light is governed to a great extent by the type of reflector employed. In general, there are three types: the extensive, the distributing and the concentrating. The former gives a wide smooth distribution of light for close-up work; the distributing reflectors provide a more concentrated beam for work at average distance and the concentrating reflector throws a long, narrow beam of light for illumination at long distances.

Claims advanced for the advantages of flood-lighting, aside from the obvious advertising value of this form of illumination, include a clean revelation of the architectural beauty of a building unmarred by signs or lamp outlines.

An idea of floodlighting costs may be obtained from the following example:

Time of operation, 5 hours per evening.
Area to be floodlighted, 50 ft. long, 50 ft. wide.

Extent of floodlighted area, 2,500 square feet.

Projectors used, 500 watt.
Area lighted by each projector, 250 sq. ft.
Number of projectors used, 10.
Kilowatt hour consumption per period.

$$\frac{10 \times 100 \times 25}{1000} = 25$$

Cost per kw. hour: $25 \times 10 = $2.50$.
Cost of lighting front for 5 hours: $2.50.

Floodlighting is also used in theatre auditoriums for such purposes as illuminating the orchestra pit while the balance of the house is dark.

The list price of flood lights ranges from $30 to $75.

Furniture, Theatre

A NUMBER OF factors should guide the exhibitor in the selection of his furniture. Comfort and restfulness are among the first considerations. Upholstering materials offer a splendid opportunity for accents in the color scheme of the room. Over-elaborateness and that which breathes of the gaudy should generally be avoided.

All furniture depends upon the finish. A glassy varnish finish on any piece cheapens the quality of the framework. It scratches easily and shows dust more readily. A soft finish is always desirable, and this holds particularly true of gold furniture, which looks cheap unless nicely toned down.

Furniture for the men's room should always be of a heavy type, giving a manly and clubby appearance. Leather upholstering is quite proper. Women's rest room should be dainty and more genteel. Cane furniture is appropriate here.

Fuses, Electric

ELECTRICAL FUSES are intentional weakened spots introduced into an electrical circuit and designed to fuse or "blow" due to excess current caused by overload or a short circuit in the line. Thus the circuit is opened before the excess current can damage any other part of the wiring or apparatus forming the circuit. They are purely a protective device and require replacement when the non-renewable type is used, or the renewal link replaced when the renewable type is used.

Fuses are preferable type of protective device because of their lower cost, their enclosed parts, and the absence of moving parts. It is good business to keep extra fuses or renewals on hand at all times. A sufficient supply will prevent a dark house. The theatre owner should not experiment on the use of fuses, but should take the advice of a skilled electrician so that an overload will not result.

Fuses may be more safely pulled than otherwise if a fuse puller is used. This device may prevent burns, injury to the equipment and other mishaps, and it costs but little.

Gelatine Sheets

THE GELATINE SHEET, for the colorful and atmospheric lighting of stages, organs, sections of the screen and other features which take the spot, is as vital as the spot and flood. The list price of gelatine ranges from 20c and up for 100 sheets. Any desired color may be obtained, either in the individual sheet or through combinations.

Golf (Miniature) Courses and Equipment

MINIATURE GOLF is a game based on regular golf but designed to be played in much smaller areas. The method of playing it is generally confined to that characteristic of putting (tapping the ball a short distance and eventually into a hole, as on the "green" in the regular game). Miniature golf further differs from the regular game by usually having added to it a variety of devices (like tunnels, mounds, etc.) designed to increase the amount of skill required. The nature of these special devices peculiar to miniature golf depends upon the particular design of layout installed.

Miniature golf is of interest to the motion picture theatre operator because of its possibilities in patronage promotion and exploitation, and as a source of added income. Soon after the appearance of the game in the spring of 1930, exhibitors began to install such courses, either in close proximity to the theatre to be run more or less in conjunction therewith, or at a remote location to be operated as a separate amusement enterprise. A number of theatres belonging to large producer-owned chains adopted the game at that time.

While the game lends itself obviously to outdoor enjoyment, it is easily adapted to good-sized quarters indoors so that it can be played even in northern climates during the winter, and such indoor establishments are common. Among locations of special efficacy in connection with theatres are the roofs of buildings housing theatres. These may be enclosed at small cost to permit play in northern climates throughout the winter.

As in the regular game, there are both nine-hole and 18-hole miniature golf courses. A good 18-hole layout can be installed in an area of about 6,000 square feet. It may be regarded as a usual thing that an indoor course would have only nine holes. A sporty course of this size may be installed in an area of around 4,000 square feet.

Each layout includes all the equipment necessary for setting up the course for public operation. In some instances, where gravel or cinders could be used for parts of the sections leading to the greens, the material might be procurable locally. The greens are made of felt, cotton seed hulls, rubber or sand (the latter being probably obtainable locally).

Prices range from around $2,000 to $10,000, with some layouts costing as high as $25,000.

Generators, Motor

THIS ELECTRICAL device is designed to produce direct current for the arc lamp on the projection machine, spotlights or double dissolving stereopticon. It consists of an alternating current motor, directly connected on a shaft to a direct current generator. Motor generators are made for every current requirement to deliver amperages from 20 amperes to 800 amperes.

There are 20 and 30 ampere outfits for reflecting arc lamps; 40, 60 and 80 ampere outfits for the ordinary arcs, and 80, 100, 150 ampere and larger generators for use with high intensity lamps.

Motor generators are made in two types, the series generators and the multiple arc generators.

The series arc is for use with two picture machine arcs. It is so designed that for the period of time needed to warm up the second picture machine arc, preparatory to changing from one picture machine to the other, it will carry both arc lamps at the same amperage without danger of losing the light on the arc lamp on the running picture machine.

Multiple arc generators are designed and built to generate direct current for many arcs. They are used in the motion picture booths where there are two arcs on the picture machines, one or more spotlights and a double dissolving stereopticon and effect machine. The multiple arc generator correctly built, will carry the entire battery of arc lamps and various amperages. The variance in amperages is controlled by the necessary rheostats. Prices range from $350 up.

Heating Systems

THERE ARE A number of types and arrangements of theatre heating systems, each designed to fit the individual building. One of the systems is known as the fuel-to-air method whereby the transmission of the heating effect from the fuel is obtained without the intermediate processes of transmission through piping and radiators. The volumes of outdoor air entering the system are heated quickly and uniformly, producing comfortable heating and invigorating ventilation in all seasons of the year. The heating units most generally used to warm the incoming air are commonly known as unit heat generators. More specifically, the operation of the warming and ventilating is as follows:

The air is drawn in through a fresh air shaft into the fan room, passing through air washers and being thoroughly washed and properly humidified. From there by means of large blowers, it is forced through the generator chambers and properly and scientifically distributed to the portions of the building to be heated and ventilated.

The system may be so arranged that, while the blower unit is in combination with the heater, it can be run independently and unrestricted by the heater for summer cooling.

The generators are so constructed that any kind of fuel, including oil or gas, can be used. The fires are controlled automatically by means of temperature control equipment, responding to thermostats placed in the theatre in various locations. Utmost flexibility is obtainable on account of the installation of these units or separate heat generators.

Equipment of this type is being used in every class of theatre from the 300-seat village playhouse to the 5,000-seat palatial home of the cinema art. On account of the exceptional flexibility, convenience, economy of operation, and perfect results obtained from the use of any kind of fuel, an owner obtains an up-to-date heating system as well as a properly designed ventilating plant for both winter and summer use. It is said that the installation cost is low and the operation is economical in such a system.

Heating Systems, Oil

HEATING BY MEANS of oil is growing rapidly in popularity among theatres. Some of the country's largest playhouses are installing oil heating systems of various makes and types. They are also to be found in smaller theatres. Among the advantages claimed for oil heating is the matter of cleanliness and subsequent savings in draperies and redecorating costs. The operation being automatic, the oil burner requires virtually no attention, effecting a saving in janitor service. Another advantage pointed out is the fact that oil burners give heat only when needed.

Most oil burners are operated in connection with a thermostat so that when the temperature falls even one degree below the desired point, the thermostat establishes connection which starts the burner again. When the temperature goes above the desired degree, the heat is automatically shut off.

Horn Lifts and Horn Towers

A HORN LIFT is an automatically controlled electric driven elevator used to raise and lower sound horns to their proper places behind the screen. They operate on the hydraulic, cable and drum and screw lift principle, and when the stage is needed for acts, the lift lowers the horn down under the stage. The portion of the stage flooring directly above the lift is attached to the lift, becoming a part of it, and any stage setup located over the lift goes up with it and is ready for use the instant the lift returns to the low level.

Horn towers are structural steel towers on which the horns are fastened. These towers are generally on rubber-tired, ball bearing casters so that they may be moved about silently to properly locate the horns behind the screen. When the horns are not in use the towers can be pushed out of the way.

Insurance

NO BUSINESS MAN today would risk his investment by operating his business without ample insurance. Insurance is obtainable for theatre buildings and equipment to the same extent that it may be procured for other types of establishments, and safety codes and modern methods of construction, installation and manufacture have permitted such a reduction in insurance rates covering exhibitors' risks that ample protection is within reach of any theatre enterprise. Besides the usual forms of insurance covering fire, accidents to employes and patrons, etc., there is rain insurance, which offers exhibitors protection against poor patronage due to storms rising suddenly before show time.

This type of insurance is now used universally to protect the operators of outdoor amusements and sports events, and the financial success of more and more indoor enterprises of this nature are thus being protected, also. When the picture has been bought, perhaps at a high price, and considerable money has been spent in advertising it, a sudden storm can mean a great loss to the exhibitor. Rain insurance protects the exhibitor against this ever-present possibility.

Inter-Communicating Telephones

SYSTEMATIZING OF business has relieved the individual of much routine and has increased thereby his efficiency. In the systematizing of business the inter-communicating telephone is playing an important part. In the theatre it contributes to a smooth functioning organization. Ladders, Safety

THE SAFETY LADDER is a safeguard, both for the employer and the employe. It minimizes the risk of accidents and the possibility of becoming involved in costly law suits. The safety ladder has the approval of the Underwriters Laboratories. Sizes range from 3 feet to 16 feet, and the list price ranges from $9.50 to $32. Because of the rigidity of these ladders, they are time-savers.

Lamp Coloring

LAMP DIPS or lamp colorings are manufactured by numerous companies, and can be obtained in either the clear color or in a transluscent shade.

There are three types of coloring. One type is for a temporary dip where the color is to be changed often. For such changes, incidentally a color remover can be purchased.

The next type is the color used for dipping lamps which it is desired to color for permanent inside use. This color should not be used for outside lighting as it will not withstand the elements.

The third type is the outside coloring. This is for use on lamps used for lighting electric signs, marquises and other outside lighting. It is a very quickly drying color, taking from three to four minutes to dry. Lamp dip coloring sells for $1.50 per pint and up.

Lamps, Decorative

THE VARIOUS lamp manufacturers offer a number of decorative lamps. There are two types of flame shaped lamps used on fixtures with imitation candles and on standing candelabra. They are made in standard base and in candelabra or miniature base, and may be had in frost or sprayed colors—blue and red—flame tint—amber or canary.

Also considered as decorative lamps are the standard globular and pear shaped lamps, which are sprayed in colors as mentioned above.

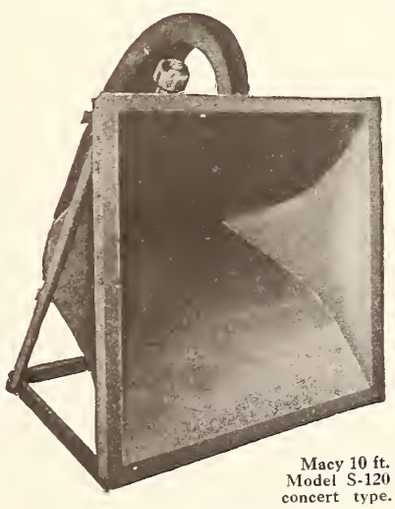
Lamps, High Intensity



IT IS VERY encouraging, indeed, to note the many recent improvements in the high intensity lamp for moving picture projection.

With playhouses of ever increasing seating capacity and consequent increase of projection range or "throw," the high intensity lamp has rapidly become a necessity with very few alternatives for light source in the larger houses.

The high intensity lamp, just a few years ago, while considered a necessity in the larger houses, was also looked upon as a rather troublesome piece of apparatus to be gotten along with because there was noth-

Lamps, Incandescent, Projection

THIS TERM may be confusing as there are lamps for motion picture projection as well as lamps for spotlight, searchlight, floodlight, and stereopticon projection. Some are quite different, and each should be used in the service it is designed for.

There are two lamps made especially for theatre projection with professional apparatus. The 900 watt, 30 ampere, 30 volt lamp and the 600 watt, 20 ampere, 30 volt lamp. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a regulator or transformer to change the current to the correct amperage and voltage.

For portable projectors such as are generally classed as "amateur" there are several types of projection lamps in very wide use. There are the 50, 100 and 200 watt lamps for use on 115 volt circuits and the 200 and 250 watt, 50 volt lamps which are operated with a regulator.

All of these lamps are designed to project the most possible light on the screen. The 900 watt lamp produces enough light to work efficiently on throws up to 100 feet. The 600 watt lamp is used for throws shorter than 80 feet. The other lamps are for short throw work, generally with 16-mm. film.

Other lamps designed for spotlight service can be had in wattages of from 100 watts to 10,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines. The 100 and 200 watt sizes are all standard and are carried in stock. There is a standard lamp of 1,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines for motion picture projection. It is not, however, as efficient as the 30 volt type for motion picture work and is generally used for non-theatrical service.

Lamps, Mazda

THE USE of the Mazda lamp has broadened in recent years, and today these lamps are used in projectors in the theatres and on stages of the studios. It has been said, and perhaps rightly, that light sells the show. Especially is this true in the cities where scores of theatres are vying with each other for patronage. In the display signs, in the strip signs, in the marquise, in the lobby and in the theatre proper, the Mazda lamp has made the White Way, whether in the metropolitan centers or in the small towns, whiter. It is being used in the studio as well as theatre. Durable colored lamps may now be purchased with coloring on the inside, permitting the lamps to be washed.

Lamps, Reflector Arc

A CARBON arc lamp for motion picture projection using a reflector for projecting the light through the aperture of the picture machine.

The complete lamp contains as a part of the unit an automatic arc control adjusted to operate at a variance of a fraction of a volt at the arc. The advantage of the reflecting arc lamp is that it will operate at from 20 to 25 per cent of the electrical current necessary to operate the old style arc lamp. The carbons used are much smaller in size, making an additional saving. The reflector arc is now accepted as a necessity by progressive exhibitors, because, in addition to saving electric current, it produces a flat even field of bright crisp white light which is very desirable in motion picture projection. Prices range from around $125 to $550.

Lenses

FOR MOTION PICTURE theatre service there are projection lenses and condensing lenses. The latter are also used in projection but are placed in the lamphouse and condense the rays to a spot on the aperture. Projection lenses are objective lenses placed in the projector head.

The prime requirement of a projection lens is to give a bright, well defined picture on the screen without any distortion or color rays. These lenses are made in four sizes: Eighth, quarter, half and three quarters (diameters, respectively, of 1 11/16, 1 5/16, 2 25/32 and 3¼ inches).

The one-eighth and one-quarter sizes are furnished in equivalent focii of two inches E. F., to eight inches E. F. The half-size is furnished in equivalent focii of four and a half inches E. F. to ten inches E. F., and the three-quarters in equivalent focii of from six inches E. F. to ten inches E. F. There is also procurable a bifocal projection lens with a range of from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in focal length, designed to eliminate the change of lenses in shifting operation from sound to silent films, and vice versa. All the sizes named are standard. Focal lengths are determined by the length size of the picture desired. Prices range from $10 to $150.

Lighting Control Equipment

THE MODERN theatre with a well balanced and effective lighting system, has made many demands on the manufacturers of lighting control equipment. Elaborate color effects must be possible and to change the lighting and gradually merge the light from one color to another without attracting the audiences a very flexible control system is required. Even the small control systems permit the operator to produce hundreds of color shades. Generally each color group has its own master control which is cross-interlocked with the ground master wheel device. Efficient control systems are available for every size house, no matter how small or how large.

Lighting and Power Plants

EMERGENCY lighting plants are equipment designed to furnish power for supplying illumination and operating the show in the event of a failure of the local power supply. It is said that the financial loss suffered by admissions returned by a theatre through only one power failure a year would more than compensate for the cost of equipment of this type. In addition to financial loss, a power failure during a performance frequently results in loss of life and property through the resultant panic.

Emergency lighting plants are made in several types such as the gasoline engine engine type, water turbine type, motor generator and battery type. In the case of the motor generator type several sources of power are provided to meet every contingency, which, together, form an interlocking type of protection.

The first source of power for the emergency lights of the theatre is the regular power supply, either from central station lines or from private generating plant. In the case of the private electric plant, if it is automatically operated, it can be so installed with an automatic transfer switch that the instant the regular supply of current fails, the private electric plant is automatically started. The electric plant then supplies the electrical needs of the theatre to the extent of its capacity. This it continues to do for as long as the regular supply is shut off. When this service is again resumed, the plant automatically stops.

The second source for the emergency, exit or hazard line circuits, is a special heavy duty glass jar storage battery, which is automatically kept charged by a motor generator set or rectifier. The capacity of the plant depends upon the total necessary load and the length of time protection is desired. The normal alternating current is fed through the transfer switch direct to the lighting lines and in the event of power failure, the batteries to the lighting lines. The batteries then supply the necessary power until the normal service is resumed, or until the batteries are discharged.

In some states the emergency, exit and hazard light circuits must be of a lower voltage than that of the normal power supply lines. In such cases, a transformer is used to step-down the supply line voltage to that of the emergency circuit voltage.

The third source of supply for the emergency circuits is the motor generator set itself. In case the A.C. transformer circuit, which normally feeds the 32-volt lights, should fail the motor generator set is operated from the main power supply line and connected to the emergency exit light circuits through its battery circuit. The battery will carry the lights only as long as necessary to start the motor generator set. After the motor generator is started the battery floats on the line.

The heavy-duty storage battery is kept continuously charged by means of a motor generator set, which is operated from the regular power lines, on an individual circuit separate from the emergency circuits.

ARE MADE in arc and incandescent types for use on stage—in the booth—in cove lighting, and for head spotting. Most spotlights on the market can be used for spot lighting and for full flood. The arc types are made in sizes of 3 ampere up to 150 ampere. They come complete with stand and attachment cord and connecter. Within the last year, the high intensity spot has appeared. It is an adaptation of the high intensity lamp to spot and flood lighting.

The incandescent spotlights are in sizes of from 250 watt to 2,000 watt. The sizes usually used are 250, 400, 500 and 1,000 watt.

The small head spots of 250 watts are used for cove lighting or spotting the head of a singer or organist. The incandescent spotlights come either with floor standard or pipe hangers for border lighting batons.

In stage work spotlights are frequently banked one above the other on a stand and used for flood-lighting from the wings. Prices range from $12 to $500.

Lithographers

THIS IS the show business. The one-sheet, three-sheet and 24-sheet are business pullers. They lend a splash to outdoor and lobby board advertising. In having special lithographic work done on special attractions theatre men generally prefer the block letter type because of the greater speed in production. In outstanding instances exhibitors have billed a show with 48 sheets. The cost of special lithographic work depends upon volume.

Block posters adapted from suitable designs are very striking and used extensively. One-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets, used liberally both in and outside the lobby, and 24-sheets on billboards, provide the box office with a constant drawing power.

AN ATTRACTIVE lobby is a boon to business. To conform to the beauty in lobby decoration, colorful and attractive lobby displays have been created. Automatic poster displays in polished bronze are constructed for convenient display of standard stills and photographs, featuring current and coming attractions. Many artistic endeavors have been directed toward the lobby with the result that today few shoddy lobbies greet the patron.

Lobby Display Frames

LOBBY ADVERTISING is an obviously effective business stimulant and in this connection the use of lobby display frames easily ranks first in importance. With the effective display frames now available it is possible not only to obtain a maximum advertising value from their use but also to add materially to the appearance of the lobby. The front of the theatre may now be "dressed up" in excellent fashion with these frames. In the case of new theatres it is common practice to design lobby frames in conformity with the architectural style of the house.

Artistic lobby display frames are now available which contain mirrors in the center with space for lithographs on either side. Or, display frames in the form of corner cases may be advantageously used. Literature on corner cases is visible from both the lobby and street sides. Lobby display frames of brass with finishes such as statuary bronze, verde antique, brushed brass, oxidized brass, gun metal, dull copper, have the advantage of requiring no polishing.

Overcrowding of the lobby with display frames produces a detrimental effect and for this reason it is necessary that good judgment and care be exercised not only in the selection of the frames but in their placing as well. Working from blue prints or an accurate diagram enables manufacturers to suggest effective and harmonious arrangements for equipping the lobby with a display frame scheme.

Luminous Paints

LUMINOUS PAINTS are being used more and more in theatrical production work. The sets and costumes may be so covered with this material that their coloring is different under different tones of light, or certain sections may be invisible altogether until acted upon by certain classes of light vibrations. A method which came into use during 1929 employs the ultra violet ray, acting upon certain fluorescent materials. These materials are substances, the atomic structure of which is such that instead of absorbing short wave lengths, they receive them and throw them back as longer waves, the colors of the waves (the colors beheld by the observer) depending on the wave lengths.

Mats, Runners

AS A PROTECTION to carpets and as a means of keeping the theatre clean during bad weather mats and runners are used in theatre lobbies and aisles. Leather mats are most common in lobbies, having a mesh for dirt and slush to drop through. The irregular features of the leather mat surface prevent slipping.

Runners for aisles and foyer are usually made of a hard material and are laid over carpets as a protection.

IT IS NOT a question of "whether the wheels go around" in the theatre of today, but rather, how they go around. Electric motor development has kept pace with the rapid strides made in other fields of the technical side of exhibition. With sound equipment the motor plays an increasingly important part in theatre operation.

Music and Sound Reproducing Devices

MUSIC and sound reproducing devices are of two types, synchronous and non-synchronous. The latter use phonograph records, which are cued to the picture. The majority of these machines, which have from two to four discs for the records, are operated from the pit or other location in view of the screen. The synchronous type, however, is operated from the projection booth, employing disc records or film recordings made in conjunction with the picture. Non-synchronous instruments range in price from $275 up. The price range of synchronous equipment is quite wide, but may be said to be roughly from several hundred dollars to $10,000.

Non-synchronous equipment, however, has importance among motion picture theatre apparatus primarily as an augmentation of the synchronous sound equipment. The non-synchronous device is commonly installed along with the synchronous apparatus, in the same manner that public address systems are added to the regular sound layout. Incidental music not provided for in the regular screen program, and entertainment for the standees in the foyers, may be supplied by the non-synchronous equipment.

Among the developments in motion picture sound is the increase in the employment of the sound-on-film method of reproduction. Experiment has eradicated many of the disadvantages of this method and increased its advantages, and as a result one producer, long committed exclusively to the use of the sound-on-disc method of recording, has taken measures for the adoption of the film method also. Installation of both sound-on-disc and sound-on-film reproducing equipment is thus recommended by authorities for theatres which in the early days of sound might have been advised to economize by installing disc equipment only.

There is NO SUBSTITUTE FOR Reliability. . .

If Ages bore trademarks, ours would be stamped with an airplane. Nothing is more dramatically symbolic of modern mechanical progress than the increasing drone of air-conquering motors. This is the New Age of Mechanical Servants—motors, wave lengths, machines. There is no individual in our entire business system more clearly dependent on "mechanical workers" than the Motion Picture Exhibitor. The picture on a screen is only as good as the equipment which projects it. . . . Good "sound" is impossible without good sound equipment. . . . Ventilating systems are automatic; so are electric curtain controls, screen modifiers and theatre switchboards. Even ticket vending machines are powered by motors. What assurance has the Exhibitor that these "mechanical servants" of his will give their expected performance? Today, there is only one safe standard for wise buying—Reliability. The Reliability of the firm that makes a product and the Reliability of the firm that sells it. National Theatre Supply Company was organized to bring the American Exhibitor Purchasing Security. It is the business of this Company to select and sell only theatre equipment that can be depended upon to do its work consistently and well. That's the real meaning of Reliability. Its importance cannot be overstated. It has no substitute.

The Reliability of the manufacturing companies whose products are described in the following pages is assured by the National Theatre Supply Company's Stamp of Approval.

ALWAYS will Peerless set the STANDARD of mechanical excellence!

PEERLESS was the Pioneer of Perfected Reflector Arc Lamps . . . It started a leader, has maintained its enviable position and will always be the acknowledged Monarch of the Reflector Arc Lamp field.

In projection arc lamps, Peerless is the characterization of all that could be wished for. Not only in economy due to the utilization of the greatest possible amount of the light generated at the arc, but in operating and mechanical maintenance costs attributed to its correct mechanical execution and a critical regard for the smallest detail of design by its manufacturers.

Let this clear all doubt . . . Leadership is not an accident. The cost of Peerless is no more than what can be paid for less. Peerless shares its quality and dollar-for-dollar value with none.

Music Stands

MUSIC STANDS are made in a number of styles, from those of simple design for smaller houses to more pretentious and ornamental ones for the elaborate theatres.

There are several very practical, up-to-date and attractive designs in music stands including the open, closed, semi-closed and resonant types. A popular open type is one in which ornamental bell-shaped lamp shades are placed one on each side of the music rack just above the level of the top of the music; this type is very practical for musicians on account of the unobstructed view it provides immediately over the top of the music sheet; its simple lines and attractive appearance are unusual and unique.

Of the closed type perhaps a popular kind is made in an elaborate design with lamps concealed above in the music sheet compartment.

Among the newest is the semi-closed type which has a solid rack of the open end design, with a 10-watt lamp concealed above the rack under a triangular shaped shade, or hood; this stand has also a flat table for the convenience of musicians. The new resonant type is of the closed design, having two 10-watt lamps concealed in the enclosure in which the music rack is placed; the resonator is below the music rack; this stand increases the volume and resonance of the orchestra and eliminates all pit light from about 90 per cent of the house. It gives the musicians better light with less wattage. Prices range from $15 to $75.

Manufacturers of music stands are also prepared to supply conductor stands to harmonize with the type of music stand used. Prices range from $15 to $55.

Organs

IT IS HARDLY necessary here to call attention to the ever growing importance of organ music in theatres. Next to the film and projection machines, the organ today is a recognized necessity and a proven box office attraction. Virtually every phase of the organ's place and use in theatres has been discussed in numerous articles in BETTER THEATRES.

Space here will not permit, nor is it desirable, that a lengthy discussion of organ and organ music be given. It is in order to call attention, however, to several facts in connection with organs that are of more or less recent development. One of these is the location of the organ grilles. While these have been conspicuous in the past, usually on either side of the stage opening a number of theatres are now placing the organ grille in the ceiling, directly in front of the center of the proscenium. At the Roxy theatre in New York the organ chambers are located beneath the stage.

Mounting the organ console on an elevator so that the organist may be brought into full view of the audience during a solo is another comparatively recent feature that is winning great vogue. Double consoles are now used in a number of theatres.

In the purchase of an organ the theatre owner should make sure that the instrument is built for theatre work.

In the main, aside from detail considerations, the important thing to bear in mind in the purchase of a theatre organ is whether or not the instrument is designed and built to meet theatre requirements. Demands upon an organ to be used in a theatre and in a church, for example, are obviously at variance. The result is that organs for theatres are built along exacting lines, expressly for the work they are intended to perform.

THE THEATRE ORGAN, in the range of musical instruments which it reproduces, is orchestral in performance. Perhaps no musical instrument is as responsive to the human touch. Chimes, marimbas, harps, vibra-harps, celestes, xylophones, bells, glockenspiels—the range of instruments is limited only by the prices of the instrument installed. And each instrument must be as finely constructed as the instruments used by the orchestra.

Organ Heaters

REACTION upon organ music and the instrument itself of cold weather and dampness has led to the development of organ chamber heaters which keep the temperature in the chamber at a uniform degree, preventing loss of pitch, and deterioration of the organ. Electric heaters with thermostat control are used for this purpose. Organ chambers are usually tuned at a temperature of from 65 to 75 degrees. If the temperature is allowed to drop 10 degrees below the tuning temperature the metal pipes become flat by a quarter or half tone. A 10 degree rise above the tuning temperature will cause the same pipes to become sharp and further rise puts many of them out of pitch. The effect of dampness is to cause a swelling and consequent deterioration of wooden chests, pipes and other parts in the chambers.

Since organ chambers are not standard in size the amount of heating equipment must be determined for each chamber. The larger the chamber or the greater the area exposed outside walls, the larger must be the wattage of the heater installed. Heaters should be mounted near the bottom of exposed or outside wall so that rising warm air from heater will counteract the descending columns of chilled air. Thermostats should be located at the point the best circulation takes place and out of reach of direct heat from heaters.

Organ loft heaters may be so constructed as to deflect the heat back to the floor of the organ chamber, allowing the hot air to mushroom out before rising through the organ mechanism. This is accomplished by a hooded top.

In large theatres operating afternoon and evening heaters are usually left in operation 24 hours. In smaller houses they may be disconnected when the show is over and started again by simply throwing a switch when needed. Prices range from $48 to $110 per set.

Perfumes and Perfumers

DISAGREEABLE odors are unfortunately a usual concomitant of crowds, particularly in such compact enclosures as the motion picture auditorium. These odors may be effectively eliminated by the use of highly aromatic perfumes, which are diffused throughout the air. One method of diffusion is the simple one of placing the perfume in decorative cones, resembling a vase, at various places along the walls. These cones are made of clay and readily absorb the perfume, which may be said to saturate the cones, and the odor radiates from the latter to quite a large area beyond.

Another widely used method is to spray the air with a perfume at suitable intervals.

A trifle less simple and perhaps more effective method is that of placing perfume in a disseminator located at the ventilating fan so that the evaporated liquid or solidified perfume will carry its fragrance through the auditorium along with the fresh air.

Prices vary from 50 cents for the vase-disseminators, to $2.50 for the ventilating system disseminators. A variety of odors are obtainable at from several dollars to $7.50 per pound.

Phonograph Motors

PHONOGRAPH MOTORS are small motors that drive the turntable of a phonograph or non-synchronous device. These replace the spring motor that requires winding. Some motors are universal and work on 110 volts, 60 cycles, or most any lighting circuit. Others work on A. C. current only and are designed for frequency ranges which the purchaser must specify.

Plastic Paint

PLASTIC PAINT is extensively used for decorating auditorium walls, lobbies and foyers of theatres. With this paint almost any sort of rough texture can be developed from the most refined stipple to the shaggiest Spanish palm finish. Sand swirl, two-tone and other effects can also be obtained in a number of colors and color combinations.

Plastic paint comes in the form of a white powder. Before application it is mixed with water; sometimes, also, with coloring matter. It may be tinted with dry colors before application, or the plastic paint may be sized and then glazed with an oil glaze tinted with oil colors. It may be applied on any type of surface and when thus properly applied and treated it can be washed from time to time with soap and water.

In the decoration of theatres today, the use of plastic paint opens up a new field of expression to the architect and decorator. It is not only applicable in many striking and unusual texture effects to walls and ceilings, and in remarkably beautiful blended color combinations—but it is also adaptable to many unique, original and conventional treatments. It can be used in panels and frescoes, in sgraffito and relief work. Sprayed with bronze or aluminum powder over a richly colored background, it produces gorgeous gold and silver effects.

Plumbing Fixtures

EVERY PART OF the theatre should be in keeping with the general architectural beauty of the theatre. Also, those parts of construction which are under cover of plaster and other exterior coverings must meet the requirements of building codes. The value of hidden fittings of high quality cannot be too strongly stressed as a factor in efficient and economical theatre operations. Included in these specifications are plumbing fixtures, both exposed and concealed.

Plumbing fixtures play an important part, both in the decorating scheme of a theatre and the cost of insurance. They should, therefore, be investigated by the theatre owner, remembering that they may be had in both white and in colors, and with various distinguishing sanitary features.

POP CORN MACHINES offer an excellent opportunity for theatres to increase their revenue, according to information from exhibitors who are operating them. One exhibitor states that in one week he cleared $59 with a corn popper in his lobby. Figures provided by another exhibitor state that in six months he took $967.91, out of which his expenses were $296.94, leaving a profit of $670.97. One theatre circuit in the east is using pop corn machines at five of its houses.

Pop corn machines may be had in a number of sizes and styles, ranging from small models to elaborate machines which also include peanut warming facilities.

Portable Projectors

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in. There is a model with a heavy pedestal for permanent installation.

Semi-Portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations. That is to say, these machines, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may be moved from room to room or from one building to another. Specially designed carrying cases are also provided at slight additional cost for convenience in transporting for longer distances. For permanent installations, the model with the heavy pedestal no doubt has its advantages. Sound apparatus specially constructed for portable machines is available.

Programs

UNUSUAL PROGRESS has been made in the publication of theatre programs in the past few years. Today the program is one of the outstanding advertising mediums of the motion picture house. It goes into the home, where it is perused by the family.

In obtaining programs the exhibitor need only specify the names of the attractions and the dates. Within eight hours programs containing effective copy, suitably illustrated, are completed. This is possible through the efficiency of highly organized and ably manned printing plants devoted exclusively to this work. Copy provided in theatre programs carries a well balanced selling "punch" creating a desire to see the attractions. The programs are amply illustrated and complete facts concerning stars, players, author and other matters of interest are included.

In the dissemination of theatre programs many theatres have regular lists of patrons to whom programs are mailed each week while others distribute the programs to patrons as they leave the theatre. Prices range from $7.75 per thousand in one color to $8.50 per thousand in two colors. Prices decrease with additional thousands.

Prominent concerns specializing in this work are:

Program Covers

CONSTRUCTION OF bigger and better theatres has developed a demand for a higher class of advertising. Offset color program covers are representative of the efforts of theatre owners toward increasing artistry and dignity in their advertising. These colored program covers are highly artistic and colorful. The fact that they are extensively used has enabled production of program covers of this type at a very reasonable cost, considering their beauty and effectiveness. In fact, the use of program covers has enabled exhibitors to attain a highly desirable individuality in this phase of their advertising. These program covers combine all the elements of a program announcement with the necessary distinctive features of a high class house organ. Prices range from $3 per thousand to $7 per thousand, depending on size of cover.

Projection Booths and Equipment

THE PROJECTION room, or booth, because of the fact that it is one of the nerve centers of the motion picture theatre, is becoming standardized. Not in size, naturally, but in general construction, and the high standard of equipment, etc. The projection booth, because of the very nature of the purpose it serves, must be fireproof and ideally ventilated. Though standardized in the general meaning of the word, the booth, in its placement, construction and equipment, should have individual treatment for each theatre. The skilled projection engineer should be consulted on this vital phase of motion picture presentation.

There are many things to keep in mind in the purchase of projection room equipment. Certain parts of this equipment must conform to the building codes, it must be practical, it must satisfy the projectionist and it must lend itself to better projection. It is wise in a majority of instances to consult a skilled projectionist before purchasing this equipment, for his knowledge of completeness and product is broad. The projection booth today is an efficiency room with an expert in charge, and the equipment purchaser should be selected with that in mind.

The design and layout of the projection room should have the careful attention of the architect or builder at the time the plans for the theatre are being prepared. The co-operation of projection machine manufacturers or their distributors can profitably be called into use in the planning of a projection room and in considering its equipment. A number of instances are known where the design of the projection room, relegated to last-minute consideration by the architect or owner, has necessitated expensive remodeling when it has been found that beams and other constructional features made proper projection impossible.

The desirable projection room may vary in size but to accommodate two projectors, it should be at least 15 feet by 10 feet, with 12 foot ceiling. This size will also care for a spotlight and slide dissolver. By all means should toilet facilities be provided and a shower bath is highly desirable.

For construction, a floor of 6 inch cement slab is recommended with 4 inch tile wall. Doors, windows and casings should be of steel. There should be two entrances to the booth. A room adjacent to the booth, at least 8 by 8 and well ventilated should be provided for the generator.

It is important that in the event of fire the flame or smoke be kept out of the auditorium and for this reason the aperature on the front wall of the booth should be lined with steel and fitted with steel covers which will automatically drop when a fusible link melts that is over each projector, releasing the aperature covers.

Projection Machines

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable machines designed for permanent installation, usually in theatres. It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent operator. Modern projection machines are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

Noticeable in the latest developments are the efforts of the manufacturers to keep abreast of the exacting requirements for projection in conjunction with sound reproduction. A type of shutter designed to eliminate the heat from the film and to provide air currents tending to draw dust and dirt from the film, are among the latest developments.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound picture projection or are readily adapted to any make or model of sound apparatus, either for sound-on-disc or sound-on-film. The latter method, due to greater thickness and density of film requires the use of much more amperage at the arc and this factor has been met with lamps and lamphouses of greater illuminative output capacity. Also the use of the perforated sound screen has to a very great extent added to the necessity of greater illumination. Moving picture projectors are now constructed more accurately and sturdily than ever before due to the more exacting requirements of talking picture projection and greater area of picture surfaces.

While thousands of dollars are frequently spent in many other departments of the theatre an apparent indifference to the importance of the best possible projection has been shown by too many theatre owners in the past. Fortunately, this attitude is undergoing a very marked change and projection is beginning to receive due attention.

many trimmings connected with its construction today, offers to the public as its chief attraction the film story on the screen. Even sound has not made clarity of image less important. That the projected image should be as bright and steady as it is possible to produce by modern machinery and engineering skill goes without saying.

One of the handicaps to the securing of proper projection in the past has been in the delay given this phase of the theatre at the time plans for the house are made. In a measure responsibility for this may be placed with the architect who, in his desire to create a palace of beauty and grandeur has apparently failed to consider that such facilities are without purpose unless the thing which the public pays its money to see—the picture on the screen—is of a quality to produce the highest type of entertainment.

It is not the desire nor the intention here to go into any technical details concerning projection machines. It is rather aimed in these columns to impress upon the exhibitor who is not already alive to the fact that projection in his theatre should have his keenest attention. The picture is the main attraction practically always and any skimping in its quality ultimately will be reflected in decreased receipts.

Prices of the standard projection machines range from $625 to $1,500.

Public Address Systems

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS provide a means of electrically amplifying the voice. The microphone picks up the words, and as electrical energy corresponding to the original sound waves, these "words" are carried through amplifiers to the speakers, where they are transformed into their original physical form as sound waves, only now of much greater intensity than when merely created by the human vocal mechanism. Public address systems are used principally in the theatre for announcements, though it is adaptable to many related purposes. Microphonic attachment may be made at several points in the system, making its function available to the manager in his office as well as backstage.

The publicity clock is placed in the projection room and projects the advertisement of a local merchant upon a circular face to either side of the proscenium arch. Some manufacturers of the clock operate upon a basis of paying the theatre a certain amount of money for the privilege of installing the clock for one year in his theatre. They can obtain the advertising from the neighborhood stores. As the value of the advertising increases, the sum which the theatre obtains from the manufacturer increases.

Recording

MOTION PICTURE sound recording is divided into two general types —recording on discs, and recording on film.

In modern electrical recording the sound is picked up by a sensational electrical microphone. The microphone sets up a weak current which pulsates with the vibrations of the sound being recorded. This current is amplified, filtered and again amplified to the strength necessary to operate the mechanism necessary to make the impressions on the wax records. By this system any number of different sounds can be picked up and the volume of each regulated to the desired volume.

In sound-on-film recording, the sound waves translated into electrical energy by the microphone, are further translated into light waves, which affect the emulsion of the film in the usual photographic manner, creating light and dark areas along one side of the film. These areas (depending in their form upon whether the light-valve or oscillograph method of light translation has been used) represent the original sound waves in their light correlatives.

Resonant Orchestra Base

THE RESONANT orchestra platform is a comparatively new development. It consists of box-like layers made of the finest type of wood, of which fine violins are made. These are placed together to form a pit base for the musicians, their instruments resting on the resonant box. It is stated that a resonator platform of this type not only greatly increases the volume of the orchestra but adds materially to the beauty of the muisc itself. Orchestra pits of this type have been installed in many of the leading metropolitan theatres.

Rheostats

AN IMPORTANT item of projection equipment is the Rheostat. A rheostat may be described as a resistor provided with means for varying resistance (opposition). The resistance may be varied by having a contact lever or slider moved over a number of stationary buttons or segments between which sections of the rheostat are connected, by compressing a number of carbon or graphite disc or parts, by using a number of levers or knife-switches for cutting in and out resistance.

THIS IS A SAFE anchored inside the box office into which the cashier may drop silver coins and bills as received from patrons beyond what is needed for purposes of making change. This type of safe has been developed as a result of the many "stick-ups" of theatre box offices in which the robber has obtained receipts running into several thousand dollars. It is widely used in several other trades, the

Schools

THEATRE MANAGEMENT and theatre organ playing are no longer hit-or-miss propositions. Both have become highly specialized. The theatre manager must be trained in administration duties, advertising and technics, and the organist must be able to dramatize the music to accompany the screen attractions. So valuable do chain organizations consider the trained man or woman that they are demanding those persons who have become skilled through graduate work in schools.

Screens

THERE ARE THREE types of screens for motion picture projection, metallic surfaced, white surfaced and beaded surfaced. Sound screens are perforated to permit the issuance of the sound waves from the horns behind.

The metallic surfaced screens are built in various finishes, from a smooth surface to a heavy pebbled surface. The smooth surfaced screen has perpendicular reflective characteristics, while the heavy pebbled surfaces somewhat diffuse the light. In wide houses, the best image is obtained on the latter type. Metallic surfaces, as a rule, are built to fit the requirements of each house.

Flat white or diffusing type screens in most cases are used with high intensity projection. Screen surfaces are made to meet the requirements of mazda, reflecting arc, regular arc and high intensity projection. Prices of screen range from 50 cents to $2 per square foot.

Screens for sound pictures are used with most sound apparatus. They differ from silent screens in that they are porous. When the horns are located behind the screen, a tightly woven canvas would retard or muffle the sound. These screens are perforated or otherwise made porous. Some are coated with a silver finish and are constructed to lace into a frame.

Screen Frames

AFTER ALL, THE picture's the thing, and without stability and solidity of the screen frame the picture is being shown at a disadvantage to both theatre owner and projectionists, to say nothing of the patron. Billowing of the screen is a blow to good projection. Now, too, there is the added element of the steel frame as another form of equipment development.

Screen Masks

LARGER SCREENS HAVE come into rather general vogue recently, due to the elaborate type of productions now being produced which, with the use of special lenses have enabled theatres to present outstanding scenes with greater effect and scope. The many opportunities to use the full screen to give added value to important scenes have brought about the development of the screen modifier, or mask which, automatically operated, permits framing of the screen at any desired size. The screen modifier, or mask, was first used in connection with sound-on-film to compensate for the sound on the edge of the film. This equipment is now being used in many other ways, especially in achieving ingenious opportunities for titles, announcements and special trailers.

Signs, Directional

TAKE THE CASE of a patron who comes from the auditorium and asks for directions. If the theatre owner has had this experience he realizes the embarrassment and other inconvenience. The patron is paying his way into the theatre and he deserves every consideration. The modern theatre today is equipping itself with the directional sign. Every business building is doing likewise.

Signs may be considered in two general groups—those that are illuminated and those which are etched on metal or wood without illumination. The illuminated signs, which are highly artistic in finish and construction, are made to read either from one side or both. The lettering in the signs is chipped into the glass and silvered, making it easy to read in daylight. The letters glow in a soft greenish color. Illumination is accomplished with 25-watt showcase lamps. Signs are fitted with lamps, cord and plug ready for attaching to light socket.

Signs—Electric

MOTION PICTURE theatres are leaders in the use of electrical advertising, the usual electric signs at some of the metropolitan houses being the most elaborate of their kind. Since the sign must necessarily be made with consideration for the size of the theatre facade and facilities for anchoring it, the matter is usually given individual consideration, and sketches pre-

Signs, Marquise and Attraction Board

ELECTRIC ILLUMINATION is a bonanza to the program. Presenting the program in the marquise or in the attraction board is a box office asset. The electric presentation of a theatre and a program is an invaluable adjunct to the theatre attendance. Large and small theatres, today, are utilizing this type of promotional presentation to bring the people to their box offices. The theatre owner today must tell his public about his organ, his refrigeration and heating and the general comfort of his audience. In the marquise or in the attraction board this message can be presented to these people.

Slides

SLIDES ARE DIVIDED into four different classes: Song slides, advertising slides, announcement slides and special advertising slides. Song slides have come into vogue within the last few years. There are two types of these: The comedy type and the sentimental type. They are sold or rented in complete sets to be run in conjunction with organ solos. Advertising slides: These are of the stock advertising type in which may be inserted the name of the advertiser. There is a large selection for every line of business artistically drawn up and cleverly worded. Announcement slides: A standard stock selection makes it possible for the theatre man to buy already made any announcement that he desires to make. They can be secured in very artistic designs. Special advertising slides: Are those made from copy furnished by the advertiser from photographs, drawings or any other material the advertiser may have. In every case, they are made up specially. Prices for stock slides range from 25 cents up. Original slides cost from about a dollar, up.

Sound-Proofing

WITH A GROWING tendency on the part of theatre owners to incorporate into the theatre building additional recreational features, such as bowling alleys and ballrooms, the matter of sound-proofing has become a subject of wide interest.

In a great many instances, it has been shown that modern methods of sound-proofing make it possible to place a ballroom or bowling alley room either directly above or directly under a theatre auditorium, with positive assurance that noise will not reach the auditorium and interfere with the audience enjoying the program.

Proper sound-proofing in such instances is an individual problem, due to the difference in building constructions, methods of ventilating, etc. The accomplishment is a matter of using proper design and materials based on years of successful installations. The system is based on proper breaking of solid contacts combined with proper absorbing mediums.

Hearing conditions in an auditorium can be provided for to a large extent in advance of construction from a study of the plans. Acoustical defects in existing auditoriums can also be diagnosed and corrective measures applied with satisfactory results.

Acoustic defects may be corrected by applying an efficient sound-absorbing material on walls or ceiling, as prescribed by a competent acoustical engineer. A number of efficient sound-absorbing materials are available, which may be elaborately decorated without reducing its efficiency.

In case a theatre auditorium is to be located in a large office building, the system can be used to prevent sound of pipe organs from penetrating to office spaces.

PROTECTION FROM HOLD-UPS AS WELL AS BURGLARS

THE York Round Door Chest is not only thoroughly burglar proof. When desired, it may also be provided with an ingenious additional protection against the activities of bandits and hold-up men—the "Hold-up Partition". As a surplus of money is accumulated over the average amount for making change, it is slipped into the interior through the slot shown in the illustration. The operation of the inner door, however, is in the hands of an executive or trusted employe who collects the money at suitable intervals. The "Hold-up Partition" thus offers a disconcerting obstruction to bandits who attempt raids during business hours.

The York Chest, when installed, is anchored in a solid concrete block, giving complete protection against fire. It cannot be removed from the building or attacked at any point except the heavy, thief-proof door. The saving in burglary insurance alone will pay for the York Chest in a reasonable length of time.

Illustrated folder describing the York Round Door Chest in detail will be sent gladly on request. Write for it today.

Stage Scenery and Draperies

DRAPERIES ARE an important feature of theatres today. They accent color and give softness and richness to an interior. Architectural lines of doorways and archways are usually distinctively hard and draperies are the mediums by which these lines are softened to give a pleasing appearance. A drapery scheme usually creates an inviting, soft and colorful atmosphere. If the drapery is in harmony with the main color in the surroundings and in proportion to the richness of the architecture there need be little worry about it being too rich or elaborate. Likewise, scenery, colorful and delicate, has become an important adjunct to the motion picture theatre. Scenery to properly clothe the stage show must be of a type which is eye-catching the moment the drop is raised. Many specialists have been developed in this particular field. Acoustical treatment is also quite closely allied with draping for color effect and harmony. Up-to-date scenic specialists have made a close study of draping for acoustical correction, and today, of course, acoustics are an all-important consideration in stage and house drapery installations.

They come in 75-lb. drums, 100 lb., 200-lb. and 300-lb. barrels. Prices range at about $2.50 per 100 lbs.

Switchboards

CONTROL OF LIGHTING through the use of switchboards makes possible the wonderful lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres today. Switchboards for this work are built in many capacities. Scenes for unusual lighting effects may be pre-selected by such a board and the theatre flooded with appropriate lighting scheme at a proper cue, by the simple method of throwing a switch. Lighting control systems are being adopted by theatres of lesser size that heretofore have considered such installations as being only for the larger metropolitan houses.

Manufacturers of this type of equipment are glad to furnish engineering service and consult with exhibitors and architects on various phases of these lighting control systems.

A new device for automatic and pre-set control of stage and house lighting has recently been developed. The principle is very similar to that employed in the playing of pipe organ music and may be operated manually or automatically from the player roll. Novel and spectacular effects are thus produced with the possibility of synchronization with the program.

Switches

NEVER in the history of the theatre has electrical equipment played as vital a role as it does today. From projection room to stage and to manager's office, electricity to a large extent runs the show. With the program on a minute schedule, electrical switches in turn have an important duty to perform.

Temperature Control Apparatus

TEMPERATURE control apparatus are devices for automatically controlling the temperature of the auditorium, organ chambers or any part of the theatre where a uniform heat must be maintained.

In a control for an auditorium the device is a small thermostat, which actuates a valve on an air-line, which in turn operates the shutters in the air ducts. In the average size theatre several of these will be located at various places and each will operate independently of the other, thus relieving hot or cold spots in any one section. Controls for organ chambers turn on or off electric heaters and also work on the thermostatic principle.

Tickets

THEATRE TICKETS are available and used in many forms as roll tickets, folded tickets, reserved seat tickets, and ticket coupon books. Roll and folded tickets of the more usual denominations are carried in stock. Tickets are commonly sold in even multiples of 10,000, the price decreasing with additional thousands ordered.

Tickets are made for use with ticket issuing machines and are consecutively numbered. This enables accurate check of tickets sold for each day. Stock tickets may be obtained for 50 cents a roll. Special printed roll or center hole folded tickets range in price from $8 for 10,000 to $158 for a million. The admission price must be printed on each ticket, by order of the government.

Ticket Booths

KEEPING PACE with advancement in theatre design the box office has been developed from a rather unsightly necessity to a thing of beauty, modernly equipped for speedy and accurate sale of tickets. It is usually designed in harmony with the architectural scheme of the theatre.

Attractive booths are made of plastic composition or wood. Others are made of cast brass or bronze with marble bases.

While larger theatres require several box offices one of these is always placed as near the sidewalk as possible. This procedure is usually followed where only one box office is used also, thus placing the ticket window within easy access. Ticket booths vary in price according to their construction, size and elaborateness from $350 to $1,500.

Uniforms

THEATRE PRESTIGE emphasized through the training of ushers, doormen and other attendants, is greatly enhanced by costumes worn by such employees.

Uniforms for Summer wear should be of a lightweight material to provide comfort and in addition, to create at atmosphere of coolness. Uniforms for the Winter months should be of a heavier material of a dark color.

Many theatres at present are making it a practice of equipping ushers, etc., in a style that harmonizes with the architecture of the house. For example, a theatre done in a Spanish style very frequently adopts a Spanish type of uniform for house employees.

Uniforms should be made to individual measurements to assure perfect fit and neatness at all times. Special catalogues are available containing appropriate suggestions for theatre attendants' uniforms.

Upholstery Material

USE OF sound absorbing upholstering on theatre seats has come into popular demand since the advent of sound pictures. A popular fabric used in this connection is mohair, which combines beauty with important sound properties. Upholstering material of this nature may be obtained in a variety of colors and executed in interesting patterns and designs. It is claimed for this material that it will not fade, does not mat down and can be kept fresh and clean with little effort. Use of mohair for upholstering is said to produce a marked elimination of reverberations in the theatre auditorium.

Vending Machines and Scales

IN RECENT months BETTER THEATRES has inaugurated a department called "Added Income" designed to keep theatre owners informed of possibilities for extra revenue through the use of vending machines and other merchandising ideas.

One large circuit which has recently installed candy vending machines and weighing scales in some 600 theatres has made a careful analysis of possible revenue from such sources and reveal an expected income of between $400,000 and $500,000 annually. Their survey shows that an average of one out of every thirteen persons attending a theatre will patronize a vending machine. According to figures from various theatres, candy vending machines have produced from $50 per month upward, each. Many theatres have found room for three or more machines.

While candy machines are considered the largest revenue producers, it has been found that weighing scales located in rest rooms and other convenient spots run a close second. Weighing machines that take up a minimum amount of room, are attractively made in various colors and which can easily be moved on rollers are now offered especially for theatre use.

Vending machines of all types may be purchased outright or may be placed in theatres and operated on a percentage of the profits for the theatre. Other types of vending machines such as soap, towel, perfume, and the like, are beginning to make their appearance in some theatres. Pop corn machines, which are discussed elsewhere in this Index, offer another source of revenue under certain conditions.

Following are listed some manufacturers of candy vending machines and scales:

Ventilators

PROPER DISTRIBUTION of air in the theatre is an important feature of correct ventilation. One of the methods of achieving this is through the use of ventilators located in the auditorium floor. Air brought into the theatre is distributed in this manner to all parts of the house. Ventilators of this type which are generally known as mushroom ventilators, may be adjusted to permit the desired amount of air entering the auditorium. It is claimed that diffusers of this type enable an evenly distributed amount of air to reach all portions of the building. The prices range from 50c. to $1.50 each, de-

Volume Controls, Auditorium

CONTROL OF SOUND and talking volume from a point in the auditorium so that the volume of sound will harmonize with the action of the picture is a recent development that is a recent development that is finding a favorable reception among theatre owners. The purpose of the auditorium volume control is to enable instantaneous change in sound volume, to enhance the mood of the particular scene at the moment it is shown. Heretofore, with the volume of sound controlled from the projection room a flexibility has been absent which has had a tendency to produce a monotony in the sound from the amplifiers, regardless of the action on the screen.

With the auditorium volume control, it is possible to tone and shade the sound directly at the point it is received by the audience, viz., in the auditorium.

low ceiling, the former excessive height of the stage made it necessary for patrons occupying front rows of seats to tip their heads at an uncomfortable angle while watching the screen.

By excavating for the new bowled floor grade, shown in Diagram 4, it was possible to drop the stage floor some five feet below the former height. At the same time the three rear rows of seating were slightly elevated. In lengthening the auditorium, the screen was set farther back, and by this rearrangement of seating, floor grades, and lowering of the stage, sight lines were made possible which insured perfect vision from every seat in the new theatre.

In cutting the new floor grade below previously constructed footings, it was necessary to do a small amount of underpinning of old foundations. This was accomplished by cutting away sections of soil beneath the old work, at five-foot intervals, and pouring new concrete beneath. When these new sub-footings were well set up, the earth between the new sections was removed and the remaining spaces filled with concrete, till the new foundation was completed. In this way the underpinning process was carried out without the necessity of shoring, and the method outlined considerably expedited the progress of the work.

The Waldo originally had three emergency exits, one entering a court at the left hand, or south, side of the auditorium, and the other two leading past either side of the stage. The space thus sacrificed on the stage was restored in the new plan, two new exits being arranged from the theatre to the south court, and two more into the theatre parking station at the right hand or north side of the building. This gave a better distribution of existing facilities, and a cross aisle one-third of the way back from the stage, leading directly to these exits in either side wall, further insured public safety in the remote event of fire or panic.

The need for a proper number and conveniently arranged exits in theatre planning need hardly be stressed here, as the building codes of practically every city are exceptionally strict on this point. There is no longer any excuse for the existence of motion picture theatres which may be truly termed "firetraps."

While there is no immediate intention on the part of the Waldo management to provide an orchestra in conjunction with screen entertainment, a small orchestra pit is provided for in the new auditorium construction, but is floored over for the present.

Any veteran of the motion picture business could write a book on the whims, fancies and passing fads of this growing industry. A far-sighted exhibitor will not build a house which is so rigid in its planning that it cannot be adapted to accommodate certain features which will probably always come and go by popular demand. The few dollars involved in "roughing in" for such future needs are well spent, and changing ideas in showmanship argue that such provision should not be neglected.

There is a seeming contradiction between the above general statement and the fact that the Waldo theatre owners and operators have provided only a 13-foot stage, which is large enough for the installation of talking equipment and an act not calling for an elaborate stage setting, but which may be given in front of the screen.

To clear up this apparent conflict of ideas it should be explained that if this had been a downtown show, or in a larger suburban center, the owners would have been urged to install a standard stage, but the likelihood of a need for a large stage is usually remote in the small neighborhood house. The orchestra and organ features are more likely to be presented in future entertainment offered by the suburban house than elaborate prologues or spectacles calling for a great amount of stage area, and the former items may well be provided for, as outlined above.

Glancing back from the vantage point of the Waldo stage, the seating, decorating and lighting of the new auditorium present a striking contrast to the former barren appearance of the interior.

VI

Contributing Factors

THE ARRANGEMENT of the seating in curved rows seems hardly worthy of mention, it has become such an accepted and general practice, yet the old Waldo was merely one of many older type theatres still using straight banks of seats. In a wide house, straight rows encourage distortion at the sides of the auditorium, as well as actual discomfort to the patron, as he is obliged to view the picture from an awkward angle. Few theatre architects of today would sanction straight rows of seating in a theatre of any great width.

In remodeling the Waldo, the old veneered chairs were removed and disposed of. When the public entered the new thatre on the opening day, they sank into comfortable seats of imitation leather with fully upholstered cut velour backs. The majority of the seats are twenty-inch chairs, arranged in thirty-two-inch rows.

Aisle lights on every fourth row of chairs contrast with the utter darkness of pre-renovation days. Thick aisle carpets have replaced the old rubber stripping which ran from foyer to stage.

In the new Waldo auditorium, chandeliers of ground glass pendants, equipped with a two-color lighting system, cast a soft glow over the auditorium. In fixtures which have no connection with the color system, flame tint lamps soften and diffuse the light and give a cozy atmosphere.

Direct illumination of this type is far more economical in operating cost for the small neighborhood house than the indirect lighting favored by moderate size and de luxe houses.

In a scheme of theatre illumination, brilliant white lamps belong only in the marquise and vestibule, where their bright gleam is calculated to attract attention from a distance. Inside the theatre, glaring lights are decidedly out of place, as they disturb the feeling of restfulness and relaxation the designer strives to create.

While one can scarcely over-emphasize the importance of proper lighting in the theatre, decoration is another item which demands equal consideration. The most expertly planned and properly lighted picture house can be made ugly and uninviting by a painter who knows nothing of color effects under artificial light, and whose chief idea of interior decorating is the use of insipid colors, laid on thick.

The only ornamental plaster work in the auditorium was a small quantity of moulding around the exit door features. Yet under the brushes of skilled craftsmen the room became attractive and colorful. Finished entirely with acoustical plaster, the walls were given a swirled texture finish, with a touch of autumn leaf brown mixed in the plaster, so that no painting was necessary on these surfaces. The decorator carried out the exit details and stepped ceiling panels in stencil patterns featuring an Indian motif in red, orange, green, bronze and black. The result was a simplicity that proved surprisingly effective.

The designs found among the arts and crafts of early North American inhabitants present many opportunities to resourceful designers and decorators in the ornamentation of the small theatre, at a very moderate cost.

Even though an exhibitor feels that he must cut his remodeling cost to a minimum, he can ill afford to eliminate the services of a skilled theatre decorator. An ordinary painter may give you a good, honest job of paint, but decorating under artificial light, the proper and free use of color, and effective placing of patterns and designs, come only after years of experience in theatrical work.

Turning to the mechanical work of the remodeled auditorium, we find that the new Waldo theatre is served by an indirect system of steam heating, the mushrooms for exhausting the air being concealed under the seating, and the supply entering through grilles in the ceiling beams, as previously mentioned. The boiler for the heating plant, in this instance, is in the adjoining commercial building, with tempering coils, fan, and refrigerating equipment in the stage basement of the theatre. The conditioned air reaches the attic ducts through a large shaft at one side of the stage.

Such an indirect system of heating is more expensive in first cost than a direct steam lay-out, but it insures an even temperature throughout the theatre at all times and also effects a substantial saving in operating costs. In figuring heating appropriations, the exhibitor should take into consideration the fact that the cost of upkeep will remain with him, long after the original expense is forgotten.

The same system of ducts is used in the Waldo theatre to cover the theatre man's three seasons of weather making—winter heating, spring and fall ventilation, and summer refrigeration.

Refrigeration costs are being reduced so rapidly that this former luxury will soon be within the reach of all the smaller theatres. This is particularly encouraging, for when properly planned and handled, a good cooling system is capable of wiping out a great portion of the old time midsummer slump that usually struck the box office receipts.

After the thorough renovation and revamping described above, which made the Waldo equal to a new house in every way, at a cost of approximately $50 per seat, the theatre opened its doors on Christmas Day to a large and enthusiastic patronage. Since that time packed houses have testified to the community's pride in the new playhouse. The parking station, furnished free by the owners to theatre patrons, is filled nightly with the cars of those who come from a considerable distance to enjoy this now-modern suburban motion picture theatre.

which are in poor condition anyway, it would pay to relocate these rooms to meet the aforementioned desiderata. These rooms should be furnished with up-to-date fixtures conducive to sanitation and comfort.

Although the accessory rooms have been discussed before, considering the problem of the auditorium itself, it will first be necessary to determine just what changes should be made in the auditorium, because here the problem is more complex and involves the seating arrangement, the sight lines, the placing of the screen and the lighting and decorative problem, as well as the provisions for heating and ventilation. Therefore the solution to the auditorium problem will somewhat govern the disposition of other requirements.

The seating arrangement and sight line requirements are of prime importance to the auditorium, because it is necessary that every seat should be a good seat—not only in the nature of the seat itself and its construction, but also in the relationship of its position to the screen. The tendency to crowd in as many seats as floor space permits, regardless of the view of the screen, has been a fallacy in the planning of many an existing theatre. This policy has resulted in a certain amount of seats in many theatres from which only a distorted view of the images on the screen can be had. These seats are too near to, or too far from, or too much to one side of, the screen. Or in some cases, too much below or too high above the level of the screen.

It would be better to remove such seats, because to sit in them is disturbing. The seating capacity of a theatre should be judged not only by the number of seats in the auditorium, but also by the amount of people that can be accommodated in its lounge or lounges. Therefore removing poor seats would not necessarily lessen the true capacity of a theatre if ample lounging space were provided for in some way.

Still another consideration in seating is that of the slope of the orchestra floor and the pitch of the steppings in the balcony. If the orchestra floor does not have a sufficient slope to overcome any obstruction of the view of the screen, certain remedies can be suggested. First, the screen should be placed as far back as possible from the first row of seats—that is, it can be about six feet forward of the rear masonry wall of the theatre, which allows enough space for the sound amplifiers behind the screen. In addition to this the screen should be sufficiently raised for the bottom of the screen to be visible from every seat. Of course, there is a limit as to how much the screen can be raised when the theatre happens to have a balcony, which cuts off the view of the top of the screen from the orchestra seats underneath the balcony. Naturally, in raising the screen, the orchestra seats nearest to it are not desirable, due to the necessity of craning one's head in order to see the complete screen. However, this can be corrected by installing seats which are tilted backward. This kind of seat is most comfortable and can be used throughout the orchestra floor to great advantage. Incidently, any amount that the screen is raised helps vision from the balcony.

At this point it is opportune to mention that the duct work necessary for the installation of a good heating and ventilating system would necessarily appear attached

BETTER PROJECTION

A DEPARTMENT CONDUCTED FOR THE PROJECTIONIST AND THE EXHIBITOR

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Remodeling the Projection Room

WHEN architects, theatre managers or projectionists undertake the job of planning a new projection room, or the remodeling of an old one, there are certain basic, fundamental things which must be taken into consideration if the new, or the remodeled, room is to serve its purpose in the best possible way.

The old idea, that any space into which the equipment can be jammed is all that is necessary, has to the credit of the industry, been pretty well discarded. Theatre managers and architects have, for the most part, arrived at an understanding of the fact that men engaged in work that demands high precision for excellence in results, must be provided with at least a reasonable amount of space in which to do that work. Men cannot and will not do their best work in a room which is overcrowded.

This being true, it follows that first of all careful consideration must be given to the amount of equipment to be installed, and the room dimensions planned accordingly, so that ample space will be provided for moving about and handling of the apparatus.

It may be accepted as basic that there must be at least three feet, six inches of clear space between the various projector lamp controls and the rear projection room wall, or between the lamp controls and any equipment which may be placed against the rear wall.

As to the amount of space required between projectors, it varies with the projection distance. Up to five feet between lens centers, there should be as much as it is possible to obtain without setting up too much side distortion of the screen image, or making it impossible to secure reasonably sharp focus at both sides of the picture. The minimum distance permissible between lens centers is three feet, six inches, but this should be used only where the projection distance is short.

Architects should invariably consult some projection authority before deciding upon the spacing of projectors, until such time as there is a table available giving the correct spacing distance for each projection distance from, say, 50 feet up to where the spacing may be five feet, beyond which that distance should be maintained, at least for the motion picture projectors.

(This department takes the liberty of suggesting to the practical projection committee of the S.M.P.E., that such a table be prepared and presented for adoption at the spring meeting, if possible.)

The location of the room has been discussed so very often in this department, as well as by the S.M.P.E., that we will not consume space here in its consideration, except to say that everything in excess of a 15° projection angle is excessive.

One thing which should be looked after very carefully is the projection room floor. This must, of course, be perfectly solid and free from all vibration. That is too obvious to require discussion. Another important point is the floor surface itself, which, if cement, must be so treated that it will be dustless. Even a cement floor which is top dressed so that it is dustless, is not a good floor, for the reason that it is very hard on the feet of men who must stand and move about upon it for several consecutive hours. Such a floor tires men, and tired men seldom, if ever, do the best possible work.

As to the walls and ceiling of the room, they should be perfectly fireproof and, as nearly as possible, soundproof. One of the best materials for both walls and ceiling is hollow tile of suitable thickness, set in cement tempered lime mortar, the ceiling being carried, of course, by suitable I-beams of steel. Such a wall, treated inside with some good soundproofing material, is pretty nearly ideal.

THE HEIGHT of the projection room ceiling should never be less than seven feet. That should be the irreducible minimum. It should be more. A low ceiling is very uncomfortable in summer, especially in southern latitudes. Much heat is generated by modern high power projection arcs, and while much of it goes up the lamphouse vent flues, still also a goodly proportion is dissipated in the air of the room. From eight to ten feet is an excellent height for projection room ceilings. If less be imperative, then there should be ample ventilation, either through the ceiling itself or through openings in the walls at ceiling level. Many cities and states require that there be two projection room exits, and the requirement is good. There should be one at either end of the room.

All film storage cabinets should have separate compartments for each reel. Each of these compartments should connect directly with a fireproof duct of ample size leading as directly as possible to the open air. No damper should be permitted in this vent flue. With such a cabinet a single reel may burn without danger to any other reel stored in the same cabinet (the compartments being insulated from each other with fireproof material, of course), and all smoke and gas from the burning reel will be automatically carried outside the theatre. No other kind of film storage cabinet should be permitted in any theatre projection room.

The wiring of the projection room should be of generous capacity. It is uneconomical to install wires barely sufficient in capacity to serve the present need. Larger wires will be somewhat more expensive to install, true, but they will nevertheless operate more efficiently, and in the event additional equipment becomes necessary later on there is capacity available to handle it. It is very expensive either to pull out old wires and install new, larger ones, or to run additional wires.

A great deal of attention may well be given to so planning things that the projectionists will find them convenient. Convenience makes for the production of good work. The rewind room, for example, being used a great deal, should be located as handily as possible. The battery room and the motor generator room do not matter so much, as they are seldom visited while projection is in progress.

Great care should be exercised in the location of switches and other apparatus, which must be handled more or less frequently during the progress of the day's work.

A greatly important thing sometimes given inadequate attention by architects is the matter of providing means by which all smoke and gases may be quickly carried away to the outer air in case of a film fire. To accomplish this purpose the vent flue or flues must be of ample dimensions. However, save in exceptional cases where the room walls or ceiling abuts the open air, something more than mere size will be required if smoke is to be prevented from seeping out into the auditorium through the crevices around the doors and the port shutters, thus quite probably alarming the audience.

In addition to mere amplitude in dimensions, there must be sufficient fan capacity to pump out smoke and gas as fast as formed—and, in fact, create a slight vacuum in the room itself, to the end that air be drawn in from the auditorium, instead of smoke seeping out. This additional fan capacity should be so arranged that it will be cut in automatically when the port shutters drop.

The points brought out in this discussion do not, of course, cover conditions that may be met with in specific cases, but they represent fundamental considerations in any effort to improve the projection room, or in the laying out of a new one. In most cases it undoubtedly would be well for the architect or exhibitor to consult some recognized projection authority before deciding on just what is to be done in remodeling the projection quarters.

A WORTH WHILE JOB WELL DONE

AWAY BACK in the fall of 1924, up in The Bronx, New York City, a couple of chaps by the name of T. Hall and J. Connolly joined forced and started a "one-horse" manufacturing plant (though perhaps I really should substitute "half-horse" for "one-horse"). These men had been with the Sperry Company, then engaged in developing the "Sunlight arc." They had ideas and believed those might be worked into something which would be of value to the motion picture industry.

As I said, Messrs. Hall & Connolly started with a very small plant. One almost had to have a microscope to find it. That was in 1924. But you ought to have a look-see at them now, occupying a full half of the floor of one of those great manufacturing buildings on Van Dam Street in New York City. In that space is a mass of machinery which might surprise you.

I view these two men with considerable admiration, because from that very small beginning they have grown year by year until their name is known from Coast to Coast, both in this country and Canada. It is not flattery, but a statement of cold fact to say that this firm has advanced to its present position through hard, careful work.

The silver in Mr. Connolly's hair supplies evidence that the path to success is not strewn exclusively with roses. There may be some of them, but also there are many, many obstacles, and the path is always up-hill, often very steeply so.

Mr. Hall is, at the time I write this, on the Pacific Coast demonstrating the new Hall & Connolly spot lamp, 300 of which have been installed since its introduction about two years ago. I just looked at the box containing one of them all packed for shipment. It is a "trifling" thing, weighing a mere 690 pounds, including the packing case. I could not help mentally comparing it with what we called a "spot" some 20 years ago. Something like comparing an arc light with a match.

One reason Messrs. Hall & Connolly have met with such gratifying success is that the firm has always been ready and willing to receive and consider suggestions offered by practical projectionists. It has been the unvarying policy of the company to place all new equipment on trial in four or more theatres of different types before releasing it to the trade. If during these trials the projectionists found fault, the trouble was corrected.

AN INTERVIEW WITH A MANAGER

WHILE IN Hartford, Conn., recently, I dropped in to meet F. T. Thomas, manager of the Fox-Poli Capitol theatre, with whom a most interesting and valuable conversation was had. I am going to tell you about it.

F. T. Thomas Manager Fox Capitol Hartford, Conn.

"Business in Hartford," said Mr. Thomas, "is very good considering present conditions. We have in this city eight downtown theatres charging from 15c to 85c. There are also several suburban houses. The union wage scale for projectionists in Hartford so far as I know, is $65 per week, though there may be some variation in that. That, I believe is, after all, about as little as we can expect to get real ability in the projection room for."

After some further miscellaneous conversation I asked Mr. Thomas this question: "What is your reaction to motion pictures in color, as matters now stand?" His reply was most interesting.

"Color, it seems to me, has great possibilities, but it has not had sufficient advancement to add much, if anything, to realism, from the viewpoint of our audiences.

"At the present stage the projection of color on the screen is not sharp and clearly defined, with the result that those seated near the front of the theatre experience considerable trouble with eye strain. I believe, however, that when these difficulties have been ironed out—and they will be—color will add very materially to the pulling power of programs."

And now here is something other managers should read carefully. I said, "Mr. Thomas, many theatre managers, in my judgment, miss a great opportunity and lose a very great deal by continually censuring projectionists when things go wrong, and not occasionally giving a word of praise when it is merited." Mr. Thomas answered this as follows:

"Mr. Richardson, the men now engaged in projection rooms, at least in the larger theatres, are almost invariably men of considerable experience and training. They also must, in the very nature of things, be men of considerable intelligence, and above all they are human beings.

"Realizing this, and knowing that while it is necessary to censure to a certain extent when men do not do their work in a proper manner, or when they become lax, it is also in order to express appreciation when they do their duties well. Strange as it may seem, it is a trait in human nature that men of intelligence, training and ability in many professions value praise very highly. Often it is a fact that men will actually work very hard to merit a little praise now and then. I never forget that fact and I believe other managers will do well to remember it.

"You know, Mr. Richardson, it is ordinarily impossible for any man, regardless of what his knowledge and experience may be, to give personal attention to all departments of a modern large motion picture theatre every minute of the day. It just can't be done. Managers therefore must to a considerable extent rely upon others for the handling of various things in a way which will bring added revenue to the box office.

"With all this in mind I have found that we get actually better results in the projection room by showing confidence in the projection staff and placing the men somewhat upon their honor to produce the best than can be produced. You are quite right, however, in saying that the best cannot be produced unless the manager occasionally gives the projectionists the idea that he not only knows good work is being done, but that he also appreciates it.

"This method of procedure I have found instills into the men a feeling of pride in their work. It causes them to do very much better work than would be produced by a system wholly comprised of censure or silence.

"Either my assistant or I continually check the house operation, and all mistakes, which I am happy to say have been reduced to practically none, are immediately brought to the attention of the responsible party and discussed in a constructive manner. Through the application of these principles we obtain the co-operation and loyalty of our employees through their desire to serve, rather than through the fear of continually having a club wielded over their heads. Which all results in a very healthy operation."

There, gentlemen, I hold that to be just about 100% good sense. I hold it to be pretty nearly incontrovertible evidence that Mr. Thomas knows how to handle men and get from them a maximum of results with a minimum of friction. I believe, as I said in the first place, that other managers may well read and very carefully consider what Manager Thomas has said. I regret that I was unable to spare time to mount to the projection room and at least say hello to the men, but a luncheon engagement was due.

CAUSES OF RADIO INTERFERENCE

FROM a service engineer, A. H. Bowen of Greensboro, N. C., comes the following interesting letter:

"I noticed in the January 24th issue, on page 69, you commented on broadcasting station interference. You mention theatre systems picking up broadcasting and wanted to hear from others on this matter.

"I know of two such cases. The first case was in the Carolina theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C. It was very interesting, too. This theatre has one of the best sound systems between Richmond and Atlanta. A 100-watt broadcasting station (WSJS) was installed for a newspaper with one antenna tower mounted on the roof of the theatre, and one on the newspaper building, with the antenna placed parallel to the theatre. Although it was known that a broadcasting installation was in progress, there was no interference experienced until the station opened up for some tests.

"At this time the theatre was showing 'Sarah and Son.' During one of the most dramatic moments when the interest of everyone ran high, there came, apparently from the screen, the voice of negroes singing an old spiritual song. I was not there at the time, but the combination of the particular scene on the screen, its accompaniment and the singing, must have been very weird, for the something like 250 negroes seated in the balcony made a hasty exit under the impression that ghosts were present. After a hurried consultation the broadcasting station co-operated by temporarily shutting down. After the show the hunt for the 'ghosts' began.

"This interference could only be noticed with the main amplifier system in operation, and with no input from the projectors. After experimenting with the grounding of lead sheets with no apparent improvement, the 12-volt circuit was removed from the F battery and the battery carried into the projection room, where a direct 12-volt connection was made to the input amplifier. This arrangement completely eliminated the interference, suggesting the thought that the pickup was introduced through the negative 12-volt circuit.

"The next step, of course, was to determine the point at which the interference entered. A removal of all grounds failed to effect a remedy. This left only the conduit as the fuse box completely eliminated the longest conduit run, which was from the projection room to the backstage fuse box, it was found that grounding the conruit as the fuse box completely eliminated the trouble.

"It is of interest to know that a heavy spark could be drawn from this conduit, which of course indicated that a considerable potential was present and was feeding back through the projection room connection box ground strip into the negative side of the 12-volt filament circuit. From there it entered the filament and grid circuits of the photoelectric cell amplifier, consequently passing on through to be amplified by the power amplifiers.

"The second case of broadcasting interference occurred at the Capital theatre, Danville, Va. This theatre was located in a hotel building upon which was mounted the antenna of staiton WBTM. When the sound system was operated for testing purposes prior to public opening last Thanksgiving, football scores were received through the system. I did not work on this job myself, but I know that the interference was eliminated by grounding the 18-volt terminal in the amplifier. Filament current in this installation is furnished by a motor generator set.

"In both these cases you can readily see that the point of entrance for the interference was the negative side of the filament circuit to the amplifiers, and the interference was cleared by grounding this point.

"In the article mentioned you comment on the fact that no explanation as to the cause of the trouble has been published. It may be possible that the trouble encountered at Oakland, Cal., was of a different nature. However, in view of the fact that the two cases described above were almost identical, it is possible that the Oakland trouble was of a similar nature. I am therefore passing on my experiences to you as a matter of interest."

In the name of our many thousands of projectionist readers we thank this engineer for his contribution on this subject. It is helpful and I am sure will be appreciated. May I suggest to service engineers that they might help out a lot by sending in a description of troubles they encounter and means found for their remedy. If desired, neither their own name, nor the name of the company they serve, will be printed.

THE POLARIZATION OF LIGHT

RECENTLY in Washington I asked C. Franklin Jenkins, the light and electrical scientist, to attempt an explanation of light polarization in non-technical terms—one that could be understood by the "ordinary" human being. Examining Fig. 1, you will see tube A, at one end of which is polarizer B, which may be one of the gaseous polarizers invented by Mr. Jenkins, or it may be a Nicol polarizing prism. At the other end of the tube (which is quite short) is a piece of glass, C, called an "analyzer."

In the space between the polarizer and the analyzer is a cell filled with a certain kind of liquid. This cell is surrounded, or partly surrounded, by a metal plate, which picks up the radio impulse coming through the air. This impulse is of variable voltage, running into the thousands. Mr. Jenkins undertook to explain light polarization as follows:

"If you stand in front of a gate made of pickets, grasp a short rope by one end, and vibrate it sharply up and down, the rope will form itself somewhat as shown in the drawing (Fig. 2), in which shape or form you might theoretically pass that vibrating rope through the pickets without touching them. The whole rope would pass through, theoretically at least. However, if we then take the gate off and turn it on its side, the rope cannot be passed through the gate unless it is vibrated sidewise instead of up and down.

"Now the light travels through space in Sixteen Million to One . . .

MOTION picture projection today demands a source of light sixteen million times as brilliant as the screen.

Due to losses through aperture, shutter, film, optical system and screen absorption, only a small percentage of the light from the source is reflected from the screen. This is spread over a picture a half million times the area of the arc crater from which it comes. That is why the crater brilliancy must be sixteen million times the brilliancy of the screen.

National Projector Carbons hold their leadership in the motion picture theatre because they provide a source of steady, white light surpassing the sun in intrinsic brilliancy.

Over fifty years of experience, constant research and the most modern manufacturing facilities assure their uniformity. Yet they are paid for, at each performance, by two satisfied patrons.

vibrations which move in every direction. Through an ordinary pane of glass these vibrations will of course pass, but a polarizer is so made that it will permit only the passage of light vibrations of one direction —light vibrations which correspond to the light vibrations of the rope. Now when the light comes forward, striking the polarizer, the polarizer operates to cut out all the vibrations except those moving in one plane (the rope vibration), so that only these vibrations may enter into the liquid in the cell (A in Fig. 1).

"And now we come to the analyzer, which is another polarizer set at right angles to the first one, so that, as you may understand from what has been said, none of this light will pass through so long as, to use an understandable expression, its vibrations are up and down. The 'gate' has been turned on its side. However, if the light beam in the liquid can be so rotated that its vibrations will be sidewise instead of up and down, then of course all the light will pass through the analyzer (the gate laid on its side) or, put in another form, through the second polarizing prism. Going a little further than this, the amount of light that would get through the analyzer would be in exact proportion to the amount that the beam of light was rotated.

"That is where our charged plate and liquid get in their work, for the light beam will be rotated in exact proportion to the amount of charge in the plates at each ten thousandths of a second. Remember that this charge is varying constantly with the current picked up from the air."

There, gentlemen, I believe that is about as clear as this matter can possibly be made to the layman. If there is no charge in the plates, then no light can get through the analyzer. If the plates be charged at maximum, then all the light would be passed through.

TYPES OF PROJECTION EQUIPMENT

SOME ADVICE is wanted by Ben J. Kubly of Monroe, Wis., and since the answers to the questions he asks may be of interest to many others, I believe he should be answered through the department. He says:

"I am to have charge of projection in a new 900-seat theatre now being constructed by my employer, C. J. Soltz [possibly it is Soetz.—Ed.]. The seats of this theatre are all on one side. I would like very much to have your advice as to what is the best arc and generator to install. Naturally Mr. Soltz desires to install equipment which will be the most economical in manitenance and at the same time handle all present day needs, as well as provide special reserve capacity for possible future developments. The projection distance will be approximately 108 feet. Size of the porous sound screen is not yet definitely decided, but it will be either 18 or 20 feet. Projection angle very nearly zero.

"We want to know if the lamps should be high intensity rectifier lamps, or low intensity lamps. The motor generator must be capable of supplying current to two projector arc lamps and one spot, which latter may be replaced with a combination color and effect projector.

"Would a color effect projector with a spot lamp be effective at the distance of 108 feet? An 80-160 generator and high intensity lamps have been recommended. Would this generator be large enough to handle combination effect projector in case a spot lamp was replaced with one later?

"I realize that you cannot specify any special equipment. However, our equipment is already chosen. All we wish to know is what is the best type and capacity."

The first thing to determine is the size and character of the screen, since that determines the amount of space it would be necessary to illuminate. The projection angle will be approximately zero, therefore there will be no appreciable distortion, and (silent picture size) an 18-foot picture would represent 243 square feet of surface, whereas a 20-foot screen would have 300 square feet of surface. Hence, in order to secure an equal brilliancy on a 20-foot screen, it would be necessary to have about 25% more light.

Personally, I am not a believer in big pictures, except in very large theatres. A well illuminated 18-foot picture would, in my opinion, be the better of the two for this theatre. If my memory serves me right, the 6,000-seat Roxy uses only a 22-footer.

It is not a good box office policy to under-illuminate a screen. However, it also is not the best policy to over-illuminate a screen either, and just where the limit should be in any particular theatre depends upon a good many things, the first of which is the amount of illumination in the auditorium itself, and the amount of extraneous light which is permitted to reach the screen.

The best advice I can give is what I, myself, would do in a theatre of my own—if I owned a theatre. I would install motor generator equipment of ample capacity. An ample capacity involves a greater first cost, but unless the thing be carried too far, the machines of ample size will operate just about as efficiently as machines working at their capacity, and more efficiently than overloaded machines. Also, they will last a very much longer time.

I would then communicate with the manufacturer of the lamp I proposed to install, setting forth the distance from screen to rear row of seats and the width of seating space, and also advise him so far as possible as to the length of the auditorium. I would tell him the size and kind of screen. I would tell him whether I wanted a highly or a moderately illuminated pictue. I would then take the equipment he advised.

There is no one who is better acquainted with both the capacity and possibilities of performance than the manufacturer himself. Always remember, however, that in order to give intelligent advice, the manufacturer (or anybody else) must have full and complete information.

First decide upon the size and kind of screen. Send that information, together with all the other things I have named, to the manufacturer. Personally, I am of the opinion that the low intensity lamp would give plenty of illumination, but as I before said, I do not know what the special conditions in this particular theatre may be involved to an extent sufficient to influence choice.

THE ENGINEER AND THE "PRACTICAL PROJECTIONIST"

FOR MORE than 20 years this department has from time to time directed the attention of designing engineers to what has seemed to be a very mistaken policy as applies to one phase of their procedure. Ever since the motion picture industry began it has been, except for some few isolated cases, the practice of engineers engaged in designing apparatus intended for use in projection, to proceed with the development of such apparatus, either entirely without consultation with practical projectionists, or with consultation so incomplete that it was without much practical value in the actual projection work of the theatre.

The inevitable result of this mistaken policy has been that pieces of apparatus developed from a sound foundation of operating principles has been worked out to mechanical completion and placed in projection rooms for trial—only to discover that because it has not been built with due regardregard to the conditions of practical work, it must be altered, sometimes at heavy expense, before it can be finally adopted for practical work. I myself have known of a few cases where this sort of procedure has compelled almost the entire redesigning and rebuilding of apparatus which might just as well have been constructed right in the first place. It doubtless would have been, too, had the engineers taken the trouble to consult practical projectionists before proceeding.

Of course it must be admitted that in the earlir days it was almost impossible to find projectionists capable of offering intelligent advice in such matters, but that time has long since passed. Today things are quite different. We now have a very respectable number of thoroughly competent motion picture-sound projectionists, able and willing to offer advice on almost anything pertaining to the practice of projection. We also have large theatre chains which maintain thoroughly equipped projection departments, employing men highly skilled in all phases of motion picture projection and sound reproduction. These departments are thoroughly competent to give intelligent advice, and I have no doubt but that they would be glad to do so if such a request came from designing engineers. It would, it seems to me, be only following the lines of common sense for engineers to invite such advice.

Did I care to dig around in the dust of the past I could cite examples where failure to consult practical men has resulted in very heavy loss by making necessary the almost complete redesigning of apparatus. Several such cases occur to mind without the expenditure of much mental effort, but the past is the past.

Engineering departments have given us some very marvelous apparatus. These departments have upon their staffs men whom we honor and esteem very highly. Just the same, however, they are not practical projectionists, and practice and theory not infrequently clash, in which case theory must usually give way to practice. However perfect a theoretical layout may be, if it will not, and cannot be made to, fit into practical work in the projection rooms of theatres, then it really isn't worth Adam.

A QUESTION OF BEING TOO PROGRESSIVE

A LETTER with a snapshot has come from Edmund M. Burke, projectionist of the Fort Plain theatre in Fort Plain, N. Y. Says Burke, "Our Simplex projectors are 1918 model and still running. They never have seen the factory since that far off year.

"Our theatre installed RCA Photophone sound equipment 16 months ago. It has been excellently serviced by their representatives. The equipment is giving very real satisfaction.

"I believe the International Projector Corporation is right in its contention that every theatre of good size should have a third motion picture projector, and have it sound equipped. It is a paying investment to do this. However, I find that a small town projectionist can be too progressive for his own good. What do you think about that?"

Well, Friend Burke, I think he can press his views upon the manager too strongly. I know I used to do that very thing myself, and not infrequently I got into trouble through doing it. I think it is not possible to be too progressive, but entirely possible to pester the manager too much. He has his problems and troubles too, you know. It is better, when you think something ought to be done, to take your time, get your facts all well arranged and then make one big sales talk, convincing Friend Manager, if possible. If you fail, then don't keep right at it. Wait a reasonable time. Get more favorable facts to present and then make another sales talk. If a second failure is made it is best to drop the matter, at least for a considerable time.

The Fort Plain theatre, with part of the staff "on display." They are Wendell Richardson, advertising manager; William G. Booth, assistant manager; George Decker, advertising department; George Crawshaw, electrician, and Edmund M. Burke, projectionist.

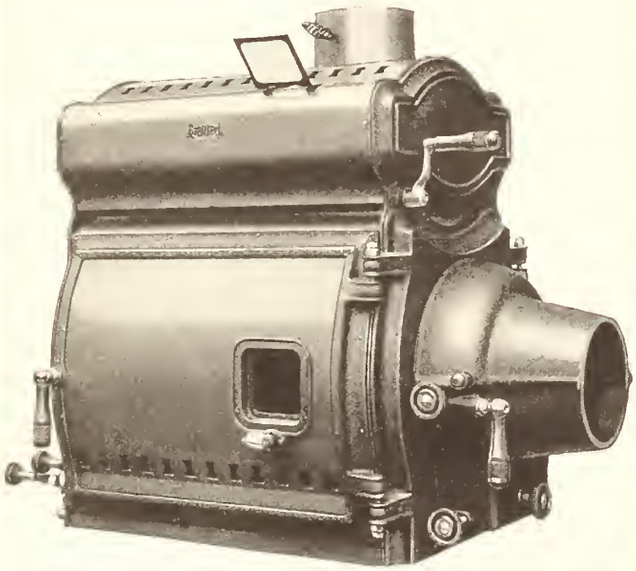
As to the 1918 projectors, why that is something with which I vary thoroughly disagree. Exhibitors should remember that always there are two sides to everything except the sky—and maybe there is to that too, only you and I are unable to see but one. There have been a great many improvements in motion picture projectors since the year 1918 and those improvements have made for better, more economical projection, hence for higher box office receipts.

Projectors cost a lot of money, sure! But high grade projection, such as may be put on by expert projectionists using up-to-date projectors, adds to box office revenue. Make you no mistake about that. I think managers are in error, from any and every point of view, when they use projectors for 13 years.

As to a third projector, yes, provided the theatre is of sufficient size and has sufficient possible patronage to warrant it. The third sound equipped projector is an insurance against show stoppage. Also it increases the useful life of the projectors by exactly one-third—that is to say, unless it is intended to keep them in use for an unreasonable length of time.

Personally I would say that five years should be an absolute maximum term of service for projectors, except possibly in small part-time theatres.

ANOTHER CASE O MICROPHONIC TUBE



FROM Paul Shafer of the Lincoln Amusement Company, Petersburg, Ind., comes a letter which reads, "It is quite some while since I have bothered you, but with the advent of sound, new things have come and I am again up a tree. Our sound equipment has given excellent service for about one year. Now, however, one projector is causing trouble. It can be heard running—heard in the horns, I mean. Even the hum of the motor is audible, no matter in what position the fader be set. It is the same whether using disc records or sound-on-film, or whether the head amplifier be turned on or not. Even though the other projector be running, the noise persists so long as the faulty one is in operation."

This matter was submitted to Lester Isaacs, director of projection for Loew's, Inc., who, together with the sound men of his department, agree that the trouble lies in the apparent fact that (a) the faulty projector mechanism needs a thorough overhauling (it is probably much more noisy than it should be), and (b) that the tubes of the head amplifier are microphonic and should be replaced. The replacement of the tubes with new ones will probably clear up the trouble, but just the same it is not permissible, when using sound, that projector mechanisms be noisy.

I think that probably if the film is left out of the projector, the exciter lamp left unlighted and the projector is then put into operation, the sound in the horns will be heard just the same. The glass of microphonic tubes itself vibrates and thus picks up the sound.

The SECRET of EXHIBITORS' SUCCESS

All men who climb to the top in any line of work possess one thing in common — a driving curiosity, a desire to know the why and wherefore of everything. A proposition is never accepted by them as a FACT until all guess work and propaganda have been subordinated to a strictly impartial and scientific investigation.

A salesman who offers one screen for all theatres, regardless of the latter's size, shape or light source, is on a par with old "Doc Hokum" who prescribes his one cordial for all ills. His proposition will not withstand the scrutiny of the theatre owner who is destined to succeed.

This company follows no such sales practices. Rather, it recommends the type of screen best suiting the type of theatre; there being separate and distinct types of Da-Lite screens to exactly suit obviously different theatre conditions.

We invite your most rigid analysis of Da-Lite super Screens, either by photometer or other recognized methods. You will find no better screens at any price. There is a Da-Lite Screen that will fill your needs better than any other.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A Department of Architectural Assistance Conducted By PETER M. HULSKEN, A.I.A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary considerations involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practicing architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

OUR Chamber of Commerce is interested in building a War memorial in our city in the form of a theatre. We would want to have some assembly rooms and offices for the war veterans on the second floor and a few store rooms on the first floor.

The size of our town is about 9,000 inhabitants. We want to make this a self-supporting proposition and as our committee consists mostly of ex-service men, we thought we might be able to subscribe about 60% of the amount required to build this memorial in stock locally and finance the balance.

We want to have this memorial centrally located so that the theatre could be leased out to a chain theatre cooperation, and the only property which we can obtain for this purpose will cost about $90,000. We figure that the building would cost us about $175,000, making a total of $265,000.

We could not charge for the quarters of the war veterans. The only revenue we would have would be the theatre rental and rental from the stores, which in our judgment should bring in about $100 a month per store. Do you think that such an undertaking would be feasible? We want to sell our stock on a basis of 7% return.

Kindly let us know at your earliest convenience whether we could get enough revenue from the theatre to carry such a scheme through, as we want to be absolutely sure that this will be a success before our committee takes this matter up with the citizens of our community.—W. W. V.

The Answer:

I THINK your proposition is very commendable and expresses a great deal of public spirit, but I doubt whether you could obtain enough rental from the theatre to make such a project a financial success. The majority of the leases are made on a basis of 10% of the cost of the building, and 6% on the cost of the land, which would be a lease of $22,000 per year for the operator of the theatre. This, I think, is too large an amount of money for a city of your size, and you will practically be unable to obtain an operator who is willing to pay such a large rental.

I do not think that you have to go into such a heavy expenditure. I believe that 1,200 seats would be sufficient for the amount of your population. Why not look for a less expensive site, even if it is a little off the main center of town. If there is no other competition, half-a-block from the main street would not make such a difference, and you might be able to obtain a lot at a cost of about $35,000, build a building at a cost not to exceed $150,000, and you might be able to carry this proposition through.

You must understand that the operator who takes the lease on such a building will have to equip it, and this takes a considerable amount of money. The proposition has to be in such a shape that it will make a money earning scheme for the operator just as well as for you, so look around a little and make economy your watchword and I think you will succeed.

The Question:

ESTIMATE the cost of a 500-seat house in a store building. Nothing extraordinary, just plain.

We have our own equipment and want to know the minimum cost of fixing up such a building. The building is of brick, 70 feet long, 30 feet wide outside, 29 feet wide inside, and has a 14-foot ceiling.

We want to have adequate room in the aisles, a large booth, 12-foot platform stage, exits, canopy box office. We also would have to have a heating system. Please let us hear from you soon.—W. A. C.

The Answer:

FROM your inquiry I understand that the store building is already built and that your intentions are to transform that into a movie house, but I do not quite understand what you mean by owning your own equipment. Whether you mean projection machines, screen, seats, etc. If this is the case, all you will need then is decorating, carpets, electric light fixtures and the items mentioned by you. A building of that size ought to be decorated for about $600, if only plain treatment is required. The cost of electric light fixtures varies according to the design and material which you might require. However some very nice wrought iron lanterns could be obtained for from $30 to $40 apiece. A standard-designed ticket office can be bought for $600 and up.

It is very hard for me to give an estimate on the construction of a projection room as all of the building codes ask for fireproof construction. I do not know whether it has to be supported or could be placed on the floor, but any local contractor would be able to give you an estimate on it. By all means have this constructed fireproof, not only for your own but also your patrons' protection. A 12 foot platform can be very economically constructed, as any local carpenter can handle that, but do not make it higher than 3 feet, 4 inches above the low part of the auditorium floor.

I am also unable to give you a quotation on a canopy, as I do not know what size you may require or how it is to be supported. This, however, could be constructed on iron channel frame hung with wrought iron chains from front of building walls with wood joist and pressed metal ceiling, and the sides could be covered with attraction boards. Much better, of course, to buy a nice marquee.

You had better consult a heating contractor in regard to the heating system. Your heating system should be provided with ventilating system to circulate the air. Carpets with padding, you should figure at least from about $3.75 up per yard, laid, according to the quality used. If you include in your estimate about $600 for stage drapes and exit drapes, you will get a pretty close estimate of what your remodeling would cost. In regard to the exits, I do not know what your surroundings are, whether they have to be built out of fireproof material or out of frame. You could figure for a complete set of exit doors with frame and hardware at about $75. In metal they might be twice as much.

to the roof construction. This duct work can be taken into consideration as a part of the new treatment—that is, not to expose it, but to use it as an influencing factor in creating the new form.

The portion of the theatre auditorium which needs most careful study, is what is commonly known as the proscenium. It is here suggested that the usual proscenium frame be eliminated and that the treatment of the walls and ceiling be carried to, and blended into, the screen itself. The space immediately in front of the screen should be left as open as possible, eliminating wherever structurally feasible, any obstructions that would hinder the possibility of enlarging the present screen size.

The subject of interior lighting effects for the auditorium is here considered as a purely decorative problem. On it depends to a great extent the psychological comfort of the patron. The more decorative illumination is used, the more reason for employing a simple type of decoration on the walls, omitting, as much as possible, the use of applied ornament and relying upon the general break-up of surfaces, set off by a system of direct and indirect lighting designed as an integral part of the main decorative scheme.

I
Exterior Facade and Display

THE EXTERIOR facade of the theatre serves chiefly as an attraction. It creates a first impression, and therefore it should to a great extent arouse a sense of anticipation of what may be expected inside. It should be dignified and yet should have a touch of the bizarre.

The marque directly abovt the entrance should serve more as a decorative feature, from under which can be spread a blaze of strong illumination, while from its roof could be projected effective flood lighting to enhance the upper portions of the facade. The name of the theatre and the changeable letter signs could be very effectively placed in groups of horizontal lines high up on the facade, forming a decorative feature.

The wall above the marquee should have sufficient height to make the theatre visible from a distance, the flood lighting on the walls forming an effective attraction. The construction of such a new wall surface above the marquee is possible by adding to the height of the existing wall, if it is too low. Also it might be necessary to fill in any existing opening that may be in this wall so as to obtain a unity of mass. If possible it would be better to avoid the use of brickwork as a facing. A material obtainable in large slabs is more desirable. Where marble or opaque glass facing would prove too expensive, cast stone, or a hard cement stucco finish over brick could be used.

These suggestions have been necessarily general, since what could be done to improve the appearance and facilities of any particular theatre covers a wide range of possibilities, all dependent upon the peculiarities of that theatre structurally. I have endeavored, however, to point out some of the more important possibilities that exist in most every theatre in which remodeling would be desirable. There remains this to be said:

Few are the theatre structures so cramped for space, so badly adjusted and so poorly built that judicious remodeling cannot make them into theatres really modern. The deciding factor usually is cost, and this phase of remodeling I shall consider in a following article.

[Mr. Schlanger's discussion of material and construction costs relative to the remodeling of motion picture theatres will appear in the May 9th issue of Better Theaters.]

fully upholstered chairs, which vary in price from $6 to $10 each, although plain veneer chairs may be purchased at $2.50 and more. In addition to the added comfort of upholstered chairs, better acoustical effect is produced.

Acoustical correction is essential to satisfactory sound reproduction, and in many instances can be effected at a small cost. Acoustical felt properly placed and decorated is very effective and sightly, and may be obtained for from 60c to $1 per square yard, for the quarter-inch thickness. The half-inch thickness may be obtained at a slightly higher cost.

A decorative material is being used in place of undecorated acoustical felt, and is offered in a variety of colors ranging in price from 14c to 19c a square foot. This material may be obtained in banners of various sizes, which make attractive hangings costing from 15 to 35 cents a square foot, depending upon design and quality.

In addition to chairs and hangings, proper carpeting contributes to effective sound reproduction. A wide range of prices prevails on carpets, depending upon the quality. At least $3 per yard should be paid for carpet, which includes the cheaper grades of axminister and velvet, though in the long run a carpet costing from $4 to $6 per yard is economical. Leading theatre supply houses have worked in cooperation with carpet manufacturers in producing designs especially suitable for the lighting conditions and artistic schemes found in theatres. All carpet should be laid with a matting underneath, which improves the acoustical effect and triples the life of a carpet.

THE EFFECT of perfect stage and auditorium setting is lost, of course, if the projection room equipment is defective. Some years ago the projection room was paid very little attention to, except when something went wrong. Managers would postpone replacement of worn parts until a complete breakdown made it necessary. However, most managers have today come to regard a modern and well equipped booth as their bread and butter, for nothing is so noticeable as defective projection.

The widely used professional projectors, Motiograph and Simplex, have introduced a number of changes in their equipment which represent advances in keeping with the improvement of motion picture technique at other points.

For example, the newer Motiograph projectors have a cylindrical shutter between the head and the lamphouse, instead of a fan shutter in front of the projector lens, and this shutter is obtainable for adaptation to any of the square head "deluxe" type of Motiograph projectors. This device is extremely effective in reducing both heat and flutter. Other improvements have been made in the design of this make of machine, all inviting consideration from the exhibitor contemplating the modernization of his projection equipment.

One of the most interesting developments in projection equipment brought about by sound is a Motiograph model that incorporates within it complete sound equipment, combining image projection and sound reproduction as one unified function of the projector.

The Simplex projector will accommodate most of the sound attachments with no change in construction. With some types of sound equipment, the base, lower magazine and speed control equipment is furnished, making it necessary to purchase only the mechanisms and upper magazines.

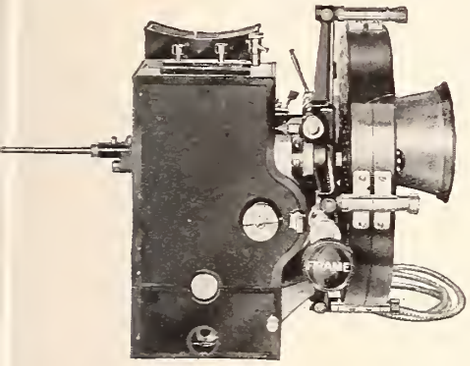
Due to the tremendous strain sound equipment exerts upon the projection machine, many progressive theatre managers have found it advisable to keep a supply of extra parts on hand for immediate repairs, such as main drive gears, sprockets, etc. Some improvements on the Simplex mechanism may be purchased with the mechanism, or separately to be installed on the projectors now in operation. These include the enclosed rear shutter assembly, which sells for $145. This shutter is adjusted much more easily and quickly than the old type, besides reducing heat. Another improvement is the special film trap which will accommodate several different sizes of aperture plates, one for regular film, one for sound on film, a proportional aperture plate. This assembly, complete, sells for approximately $20.

A great deal of trouble has been experienced with the sound-on-film prints, since the sound track has reduced the picture area so that it is nearly square when projected upon the screen. This condition may be corrected by using a proportional aperture plate, which slightly reduces the picture area on all sides. When using this plate it is necessary to use a lens of approximately one-half inch smaller equipment focus to project the same size picture on the screen as obtained from silent or regular disc prints. As the side of the aperture which protects the sound track is cut down more than the other three sides, it is necessary to center the picture on the screen. The Simplex lens aligning device, which can be purchased for $32.50, eliminates the necessity of moving the entire projector for centering the picture on the screen. Also adaptable to older models is a lens turret that holds three different sizes of lenses with independent focusing adjustments. The size of the picture on the screen can be quickly and easily changed by revolving the turret to bring the desired lens (correctly focused) in use. This device is popular with magnascope projection, as one can shift from a regular shot to "magnascope" and back again by using one projector, instead of two.

It should not be necessary to stress the importance of proper lenses, though frequently an exhibitor does not realize how poor his lenses are until the proper type has been demonstrated to him. They vary in price from $30 to $150 each, depending upon the make and local conditions.

ADEQUATE screen illumination is also a very important factor in obtaining proper projection results. The sound screen has caused a loss of light in many instances, of 25 per cent or more. Obviously, a ready way to offset this loss and meet the increased light needed on large screens is to increase the light intensity at the source in the form of better lamps and generators. The days of the old regular carbon arc and mazda projection have passed. Low intensity reflector arc lamps give much better light than the old carbon arc or mazda and are economical to operate. Operating at a low amperage, the current costs, as well as the carbon and supply costs, are low. These lamps are priced from $250 to $350 each.

In many installations with sound it has been found necessary to use the high intensity reflector arc lamp, operating at approximately 65 amperes, and costing about $525, occasionally less. Large houses with long throws and large screen frequently find the high intensity lamp operating on 125 amperes or more to be most satisfactory. High intensity lamp prices range upwards from $450 each.



Generators for the lamps referred to must have the correct amperage for the lamp used. Generators for the low intensity reflector arc lamp cost from $375 to $550, with $900 or more for the high intensity arc lamp, and $1,200 and up for the high intensity lamp. In buying generators one should always consider spotlights and effect machines as well as the projector lamps, to be sure that the generator will be large enough to accommodate the maximum load forced upon it.

An interesting device has recently been put on the market which simplifies the proper regulation of the fader control to compensate for various changes and conditions. Instead of relying upon monitor horns in the booth, which are affected by numerous interferences and noises, the fader adjustments are regulated by an observer in the house by remote control. This device is controlled directly from the auditorium by the observer, who raises or lowers the volume in the house as needed. This device sells for from $100 to $200.

One of the most important and perplexing problems of the modern theatre is how to obtain proper cooling and ventilating at a reasonable cost. A refrigeration system is obtainable for as low as from $8,000 to $12,000 for a medium-sized theatre.

For the cooling method employing fans and air washers, noiseless, all-metal, ball bearing fans are made in a wide range of sizes to accommodate any theatre and range in price from $225 for the smaller houses, to $550 for the larger theatres, while air washers are also made in various sizes and are priced from $450 up.

Vol. 103, No. 3 — April 18, 1931

Mrs. Rockefeller Goes Modern

THE lay press has been making a great pother about the plans for Radio City and their pictorial aspect as represented in the photographs given out for publication. In sequel to the uproar has come an announcement of some modifications of plans, a placating statement in answer to the critics who appeared to be hurt by the evidences of a most acute modernism in the architecture.

Investigation reveals that it is just a teapot tempest after all. The truth is that the plans are not now, and likely for months yet will not be completed, save in their broadest aspects. Also the pictures which were given to the press were issued largely because the architects had spent about $30,000 on a plaster model and insisted on some publicity action for their money. The plans had already been changed before the model was itself complete. A hundred and odd other changes have gone across the drafting boards since. No one will be absolutely sure about how Radio City will look until the day it is done.

It is entirely certain however that Radio City will be acutely modern and that it will be worth looking at. It has been a somewhat guarded secret that the strongest influence for modernism in the project is Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. She has declared for the spirit of newness and aggressive youth, which seems quite natural enough in the mother of the dashing Abby Rockefeller, the snappy motorist. Incidentally one of Mrs. Rockefeller's sons is employed by an architect engaged in Radio City plans. It is likely that the young man's mother's ideas get rather prompt delivery in that office.

In the modern spirit and the tempo of the times, nothing is settled about Radio City but the size and the place. It will be large and probably loud.

Incidentally, too, in this project there is a remarkable exemplification of the interweaving of the strands of our commercial and social fabric. Radio City is essentially an amusement enterprise, apparently rather practically to be a part of the institution of the screen, what with Radio's picture connections and impending television.

But, even though Radio City is to be a capital of the industry of mere sounds and shadows, its roots and ramifications extend afar. The order for steel alone amounts to 125,000 tons, an item of $10,000,000 to be spent for labor and ore, from the Iron Range mines to the mills of Gary, employment for thousands. And on the other hand the ground rentals of the site represent between a third and a half of the income of Columbia university. So in this wise the motion picture becomes an important indirect participant in the affairs of everything from labor to culture, very much indeed a part of the whole structure of the life of America today.

"At Liberty" - - also "Resting"

NOW that the King of Spain has resigned from his exciting postion he may be considered to be the most ornate addition to the masses of the unemployed. In view of the considerable publicity which he is receiving and his influential connections it would seem inevitable that the motion picture should make an offer for his services. He made a screen debut some time past in Fox Movietone News with considerable success.

While the HERALD hesitates to exert editorial pressure on a royal and urbane personage like Alfonso, it may not be amiss to remind him that some years ago Czar Nicholas of Russia failed to respond to a cabled offer from Lewis J. Selznick to appear in the pictures that "make happy hours." That the Czar made a mistake is now a part of unhappy history.

Roxy's Lucky R's

RKO's acquisition of Samuel L. Rothafel for theatre operations, announced in this issue, brings to mind the persistence of the letter "R" in the affairs of "Roxy." He believes in the letter and considers it lucky. "R's" have run through all his Broadway history in the names of theatres and staff. Consider: Rialto, Rivoli, La Rose, Riesenfeld, Rapee, Ramsaye, and now the rippling radio.

The Spring Blossoming

IT IS the glad season of daffodils and dandelion greens, and new grey hats and motion picture conventions and product announcements. This is the season of the optimists, the budding, burgeoning, blooming weeks of fresh ideas and new hopes, with the colors of first growth. Now is perhaps the brightest, merriest time of all the motion picture year, all the way from the studios where there is the hum of preparation to the exhibitor in the field, looking with eager anticipation for the story of the pictures which promise to make this a golden year at his box office. Each year at this time it is the glad mission of this paper to be the bearer of the gay, bright colors of the producers' presentations of their wares for the season, pages laden with the concentrated distillation of the ideas which are to be purveyed to the audiences of the nation, the messages of promise to the theatres which are in fact the purchasing agents of happiness and entertainment for the millions. This is a pleasant function, and a blithe season.

"Insignificant, But Noisy"

CHEERFUL significance attaches to the observation of Dr. Clinton Wunder, of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, speaking before the Berkeley Women's Club: " . . . leaders of organizations representing a total membership of six and one-half million people are cooperating in a constructive movement for better pictures. Opposed to this group is an insignificant number of men and women who find nothing good in motion pictures and prefer their own intolerant standards, and who seek through politics to dictate what the American public shall see and hear in their theatres."

Dr. Wunder might have qualified his phrase, "insignificant number," adding "insignificant, but noisy."

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

AT a meeting of the technicians' branch of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences a lively discussion concerning the economy of the new supersensitive film revealed that approximately 50 per cent less light was needed.

"This means a big saving," said someone. "Nothing of the kind," retorted another. "I've checked six studios and four of them report that the lighting expense runs about the same."

Investigation revealed that bulbs of smaller wattage had not been purchased and that the old highpowered bulbs were being dimmed with silks and other dimmers and diffusers.

This strange economy having been revealed, another angle was disclosed. Another speaker said that a foreign version was shot with the old type film. Following this, the American version was made with the supersensitive. The smallest set in the American version was as large as the largest set in the foreign version. Naturally, more lights were needed for the larger sets. The cost was about the same.

"Supersensitive's no good," said an executive. "One version costs as much as another." He just overlooked the size of the sets, that's all.

Old Show Superstition

Although he has held his post here for some time now, as such things go, a midwestern exchange manager refuses to have his name inscribed on the office door. Salesmen at the same branch will not have business cards printed, either.

A Chicago exchange manager, years ago, hired a promising young salesman. He took a personal pride in the new man's outstanding work, assigned the choicest accounts to him, and never failed to give him full credit in his reports to the home office. The new man made consistent progress and eventually was appointed to a post above that of the man who had employed him. His first act on attaining his high office was to discharge the branch manager who had employed and befriended him.

The branch manager had little difficulty in obtaining a new connection. He administered his new post capably and with some distinction. Time went by, and eventually the branch manager's one time protege, who had continued his upward climb in spectacular fashion, was dismissed by his company. His new position was one of authority in the same company with which his old friend, the branch manager, had become associated. Again, one of his first acts was to dismiss the man who originally had employed him.

Tough for Office Boy

The head of a theatre chain, whose salary runs into six figures a year and who is nationally known as the possessor of plenty of money, has a deep affection for his advertising manager, making a few hundred a week, and wanted to express all this affection. He gave the advertising man two neckties. The advertising man called in his office boy and gave him the two neckties. The office boy wears the neckties now and then.

Just for Luck

Robert Coogan, brother of the famed Jackie, is currently credited in Hollywood with having changed the time-honored custom of all-around handshaking at the time a contract is signed.

Bobby's father, Jack Coogan, Sr., and his attorney were recently in Ben Schulberg's office, so the story goes, consulting with Ben and Paramount attorneys on final details of Bobby's contract with Paramount. When all the whereases and wherefors had been properly checked and approved, Father Coogan affixed his signature in behalf of Bobby, while Schulberg performed the honors for Paramount. Then Bobby, previously much bored, is said to have come to life.

"Is it all set now, Dad?" he asked.

"All set, Bobby," replied the Elder Coogan.

With that Bobby rushed around behind Schulberg's desk. As Schulberg turned to shake hands with the eager faced boy, Bobby presented Ben with a sharp kick in the shins!

When the adults had recovered from the shock Papa Coogan demanded to know the reason for such action. Turning to Schulberg, Bobby exclaimed:

"That's for luck, Mr. Schulberg!"

Food for Thought

In Hollywood an elderly man and his wife decided to open a lunchroom across from a large studio. They invested their savings in the place, and made it very attractive.

Employes from the studio began dropping in, and it looked as if the elderly couple would be rewarded for their efforts.

Then, one day, a studio executive heard about it. There is a restaurant at the studio which contributes income to the company.

"I'm sorry," he told those who had patronized the place run by the elderly couple, "but there is a studio restaurant. Perhaps you'd better eat there."

SOME weeks ago it was generally expected in the trade that the president of a company affiliated with the picture industry would promote himself to chairmanship of the board and that a subordinate would be honored with the presidency of the company. The annual meeting of the directors came and went and there was no change, and many wondered why.

Now the story is out. The president-to-be "talked." His superior frowns on "talking" and on people who "talk." He is known as a severe disciplinarian. When he heard that his nominee had boasted of his impending presidency, he canceled the promotion. Not only that, another high official of the company now rates the fair-haired boy.

Some Day They'll Learn

Here's a curious slant on British production. While Carroll Dunning, president of Dunning Process Company, was in London recently he called at the Elstree Studios. One producer there, Basil Dean, was in a fix. He had to put the cast into London street scenes and was unable to do so day by day because of the daily fogs. It was impossible, in other words, to take the camera outside the studio.

"You should have our process here," said Dunning. "We could put the street scenes into your pictures—there must be plenty of stock shots here—and you will have no delay at all."

"How much will you charge," asked Dean, "to send your technician over?"

"Four thousand dollars."

"But," said the British producer, "your price is altogether too high. How do you arrive at this figure?"

"Because," Dunning explained, "my son, Dodge, would have to come over and we cannot spare him."

Evidently the fogs continued, because when Carroll Dunning reached New York he found a cable from Dean, accepting his proposition and asking for immediate help. That is why Dodge Dunning is hurrying to London.

Twenty-five Per Cent Off

One of the he-men of the Hollywood screen recently took a three months vacation in Europe, visiting Vienna, Munich and way stations on the stein route. He came back, weighing 259 pounds—stripped! His handlers and trainers went to work. In six weeks they took off 62 pounds. Now comes the problem of new clothes because the waistline was diminished by eleven inches.

THE INSIDERS

PUBLIC TURNS THUMBS DOWN ON ADVERSE THEATRE LEGISLATION

Right Off the Shelf

In two years, national companies have refilmed in sound 130 of the old "successes" of pre-talker days. Comparatively few, however, have hit the box office high spots reached by silent predecessors.

200 Sumptuary Bills Are Defeated by Solons—Sunday Opening Gain in Five States, Showing a Decided Public Trend Toward Liberalism, According to HERALD Survey

The American public, through its legislators, has declined to place additional burdens on the shoulders of the motion picture industry, according to a nation-wide survey just concluded by MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

With a majority of the legislatures, which convened in 44 states after January 1, adjourned, the HERALD learned through its survey that more than 200 bills adverse to motion pictures had been defeated.

These included tax, censorship and blue law measures.

Not only were Sunday closing bills defeated. In at least five states the public's legislative representatives displayed their trend toward liberalism by adopting bills granting shows on the Sabbath. States included are New Mexico, Arkansas, Maryland (for Baltimore only, with a referendum to be held), Ohio, and Idaho. Several cities were granted home rule on the question.

Thirteen States to Act

Although nothing definite regarding the legislative situation could be learned from the offices of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, C. C. Pettijohn did state that the HERALD's figures were substantially correct.

Forty-four states were included in the HERALD survey. Twenty of these legislatures adjourned without passing any adverse legislation. At the time of the survey there was no apparent danger in 11 other states. In 13 states serious matters were pending.

Fox to Copyright All Its Ad Matter

All press books, exploitation material and ad accessories issued by Fox will be copyrighted, according to a decision that will be placed in effect with all pictures beginning with "Women of All Nations."

This rule does not mean that theatres buying Fox product cannot use Fox ad matter without making special provision. The copyright law will be invoked, it is stated, merely against those who have no interest in the exhibition of Fox product.

Industry Awaits Word on Code Revision for Labs, Theatres

Complete revision of the fire code for laboratories, exchanges, studios and theatres, by the National Fire Protection Association, is not expected by film leaders to cause undue hardship to the industry, in view of the fact that majority of companies involved have, over a period of years, concentrated on fire prevention. Fire rate in the film field, it is contended, has been lower than in most major industries.

British Move to Unify National Censorship Views

London—Efforts are being made to establish a general censorship code that will enable the British censors and local authorities to rule on pictures in harmony.

The move comes as a result of growing number of cases in which the film censor is reversed by local councils, causing the prestige of the censor to suffer.

Hays' Office in New Quarters

The Hays organization soon will announce removal to new quarters, located on 44th or 45th streets, some place near Fifth avenue. Will H. Hays returns to New York from his annual Coast visit about May 1.

Present headquarters are at 469 Fifth Avenue, New York, where the organization has operated since its inception early in 1922.

Sheehan to N. Y. for Convention

Winfield Sheehan, Fox vice-president and general manager, arrives in New York April 26 for the annual sales convention.

Germans Now Have 30 of 200 Houses Projected in U. S.

Acquisition of 30 theatres in the United States by German interests for the exclusive showing of German product, is reported in New York by those close to German film activities in this country. It is also stated that these houses form only the nucleus of a circuit to embrace 200 theatres.

The name of Milton Diamond, described as an important cog in the Warner-Klang-film negotiations, is linked with the enterprise as its promoter. The string is said to be the result of the difficulty met in efforts to get American bookings for German pictures.

Oust Brezillon as Head of Syndicate

Paris—Leon Brezillon, for 19 years president of the Syndicate des Directeurs, has resigned—virtually forced to, according to reports in the trade here. In his stead has been appointed Raymond Lussiex.

Other new officials elected in the shakeup are Messrs. Vignal, Bernheim and Hoch, vice-presidents; and A. Gerard, general secretary.

RKO May Get Central, N. Y. To Replace Globe Theatre

Sources close to RKO have indicated that the company may take over the Central theatre, 47th and Broadway, at the termination of its lease on the Globe, where several of the premier attractions of Radio have been shown.

Only Managers at MGM Meet

Salesmen will not attend M-G-M's national sales convention this year. The confab, opening April 26 at the Chicago Drake, will be confined to managers.

British Quota Rises to 12 3-8%

London—The British quota law now enters its fourth year, automatically increasing to 12⅜%.

The first year, ended March 31, 1929, saw a 7½% quota. In 1930, the law automatically raised the figure to 10%. Next year, the current 12½% regulation advances to 15%, the permanent figure.

The new figure, and next year's large percentage, is forcing a number of American companies to establish production units in England to meet quota requirements. Approximately 86 British made talkers must be released by English distributors this season.

Harry Reichenbach to Hospital

Harry Reichenbach this week entered Doctors' Hospital, New York. He has been suffering since last October from an infected thymis gland.

BUYING THE SCREEN STORY

Though literary problem confronts producers, they are lining up many plays and novels which have been currently popular on Broadway and elsewhere

By AILEEN ST. JOHN-BRENON

WITH the coming of spring and conventions, motion picture producers have put their market baskets over their arms, left their swivel chairs in Hollywood and Broadway and ventured forth into the literary market places for a frenzied buying of dramatic raw produce. Some of it, experience has shown, will find its way into cold storage, but no matter.

For weeks past authors have been on the well known edge, fearing, lest in the fevered excitement of hurried purchasing their literary stalls will be overlooked. Old plays, books, novels, manuscripts have been taken out of trunks and attics and enticingly displayed alongside of the new ones in the hope of attracting the editorial eye and pocketbook, unmindful of the fact that a few months hence loud lamentations will rend the air over the dissimilarity of the celluloid off shoot and the original manuscript. But again, no matter. The buying season is at its height, and author's bank accounts are swelling while producers shelves are bulging.

Plays, novels, short stories, authors, once again they are being lined up for Mr. Exhibitor.

Stage plays current on Broadway acquired by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are Noel Coward's latest offering, "Private Lives"; Pirandello's widely discussed drama, "As You Desire Me," and "Grand Hotel," the author of which, Vicky Baum, is due here momentarily to wield her clever pen for the screen.

Ivor Novello's "The Truth Game" recently concluded a four month's Broadway run and has been purchased by MGM and despite the ban against musicals "Flying High," George White's brilliant musical production, occupies an important place on the same company's list of new purchases. MGM has also bought the football story "Huddle" by Francis Wallace, published serially in College Humor. The unproduced plays, one the Hungarian "Ferike as a Guest" by Ladislas Bus Fekete and Alexander Goth, and "Nightcourt" by Mark Hellinger and Charles Beahan have been bought by Metro.

A play which Crosby Gaige was destined to produce but never did. "Rivets" by Jack McDermott, has been purchased by United Artists who has likewise signed Ursual Parrott as well as purchased her new book, "Love Goes Past." Miss Parrott, speeded by George T. Bye who secured a Fifth avenue bus and a cohort of literary friends to take her to the Twentieth Century last week, has just arrived in Hollywood to assume her new duties.

Faith Baldwin's "Skyscraper" and Fannie Hurst's novel, "Five and Ten," have both gone to Metro. The spirit of revivals is by no means dormant,—even if so valuable a piece of property as "The Great Divide" needs must be revived as "Woman Hungry," and the rights to Margaret Mayo's pretty play "Polly of the Circus," a hit of 1907, also goes to MGM who likewise has acquired Katherine Brush's "The Red Headed Woman," "Bridge vs. Bridge" by Edward McKenna, also "Pigboats" by Edward McKenna.

Despite the difficulties presented by a film version of "Tomorrow and Tomorrow," Philip Barry's successful play now running on Broadway, the film rights have been obtained by Paramount. Two war stories, "Step Daughters of War" and Hemingway's "A Farewell to Arms," have also gone to this company which also has secured Bromfield's Twenty Four Hours," "Graft" and "Silence," while squabbles continue unabated between Dreiser and the organization over the novel, "An American Tragedy," with the latest reports from Dreiser being "I will fight for my literary character if it takes years." Despite his indignation he is "not necessarily" finished selling his film rights to his works. But when they are sold they will be sold as they are. "I don't want to compel them to lose money, but I don't want to be injured either, and I don't think they would lose money if they stuck to reality," adds Dreiser, who made his money out of realism.

RKO Radio is concentrating on the author rather than the finished product. That is to say, instead of buying published material—plays, magazine stories and novels—and getting authors to rewrite it for screen purposes, the company is catching its authors first and buying original stories for the most part. In pursuance of this policy three stories have been bought from John Howard Lawson, Louis Weitzenkorn and Nell Baker. RKO Pathe, according to the scenario department will concentrate on novels for its program as yet incomplete.

"Five Star Final," one of the most sensational plays on Broadway this season, has been purchased by First National, and the novel, "Sob Sister," has gone to Fox. Robert Sherwood's amusing comedy, "So This is New York," purchased by Paramount who is developing a distinctive policy as regards to authors and plays.

Don Henderson Clark's best seller, "The Impatient Virgin," following close upon his "Millie," has become the property of Universal which will bring, it seems, two different stories by Erich Maria Remarque to the screen, "Fate" and "The Road Back," and it is "The Road Back" which is Remarque's sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front." There is some talk about Remarque himself coming to the Universal lot in the autumn to associate himself with the latter production.

A series of shorts by Bugs Baer have been transferred to RKO Pathe.

The problem of obtaining material for next season's programs has been giving producer's something to worry about. It's by no means all beer and skittles even if you have the ducats. As one producer pointed out the stage which is the logical source from which to seek dramatic material has proved inadequate. Of some 500 plays which have been produced this season about 300 have come to New York. Of these less than 20 have been found good picture material—three have not yet been purchased—"Tonight or Never," there having been talk of it for Gloria Swanson; "The House Beautiful" and "And as Husbands Go" one of the best pieces of material on Broadway. This leaves big gaps in production programs. For this purpose Paramount has formed the Ray-Miner Corporation to produce plays which before production have been selected with a view to their motion picture suitability. Already six plays or more have been selected. And the companies are still meeting the problem by signing authors who have proved their worth—Ursula Parrott, Sam Raphaelson, A. A. Kline, John Howard Lawson, Zoe Akins, Becky Gardiner, Willard Mack.

RCA UNITS IN "ADVERTISING POOL" WITH LEADING NON-FILM PRODUCTS

Something New in Socks from the Masses

The following squawk was received the other day by one of the fan publications from an indignant picturegoer:

"Announcements of pictures to be displayed must be concocted by ex-circus ballyhooers gone literary. Invariably they disappoint. They remind one of the sales sheet of the hometown drygoods merchant. They inspire about as much excited anticipation in a blasé film fan as posters announcing a lecture on China missionary work. They are like the fanfare of a circus band which accompanies the outstanding trick of an elephant or poodle dog without variation. Audiences, grown cynical by disappointments, endure with boredom the verbal acrobatics and trumpetings of these proclamations. A calm, cool statement of the merits of coming pictures would arouse an audience from apathy because of its novelty."

Trans-Lux Eyeing Home Field; Readying for Television Advent

Now Developing Cabinet to Combine Motion Pictures, Sound and Radio as Unit

Trans-Lux is eyeing the home field for both entertainment and educational purposes.

Besides extension of its present New York newsreel theatre to a national circuit of houses similarly using rear projection, the company declares that plans "have already been made" for combining Trans-Lux equipment for visual instruction and entertainment when television has developed to the point of commercial exploitation.

Currently under development, it is stated, is a cabinet designed to include motion picture, sound and radio apparatus.

Net 1930 earnings of the Trans-Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation, which, with Radio-Keith-Orpheum, owns the stock of the Trans-Lux Movies Corporation, the theatre concern, are given as $475,606, as against $525,388 in 1929, and $44,719 in 1926, first year of the company.

Combine With Fox Saved Hoyt Chain, Munro Tells Board

Sydney, Australia—The general depression is costing amusement companies here plenty. Balance sheets tell the sad story. For the six months ended December 27, 1930, Hoyts Theatres Ltd., turned in a loss of $50,490, and for the six months ended June 30, 1930, J. C. Williamson, leading "legit" venture, showed a loss of $92,515. These figures contrast with Hoyts' profit of $404,000 for 1929-30, and with Williamson's surplus for 1928-9 of $254,020.

Inside facts concerning the amalgamation of Fox and Hoyts' interests found light at an extraordinary meeting of Hoyts' stockholders at the tabling of the half yearly balance. Since last October it was disclosed that Fox has assisted Hoyts by advancements totalling $150,000, and that Hoyts' directors' fees had been reduced from $37,500 a year to $18,500.

The meeting gave directors a few tough hours. Most shareholders kicked bitterly because no dividend was declared, their 'plaints drawing the reply from Charles Munro, managing director, that while their chance of getting a dividend for this half was negligible, owing to the deficit, they would get them in the future, or else he would be looking for another job. Fox of America had made that clear to him, Munro told them.

In reply to queries why preference holders had not been consulted before the negotiations with Fox had been concluded, Munro commented that if the deal had not been consummated, Hoyts would now be in liquidation.

Fox Sells Three in New York After Announcing Sales' End

Fox will dispose of three Bronx houses, Bleuheim, Belmont and Parkway this week, despite recent announcement that no more would be sold in New York.

It is thought the three will be taken by the Manhattan Playhouse circuit.

Regular Meetings Held for Cooperative Action

Public Promotion Campaigns Built By Same Agency to Combine Interests of Each Other

An "advertising pool" tying up one of the motion picture industry's largest holdings with important non-film products and services, is revealed in a system of Lord & Thomas and Logan, national advertising agency. The film and theatre interests participating are those of RKO, which, along with the other companies involved, place their advertising through Lord & Thomas and Logan.

One of the major phases of the system calls for meetings each Friday of the advertising and publicity executives of all Radio Corporation of America companies, including Radio Pictures, RKO Pathe, Radio Keith Orpheum and RCA Photophone, besides RCA itself, Victor and the rest, with executives of Lord & Thomas and Logan participating. At these meetings ideas for sales promotion are brought forward and efforts made to select points of common public interest along which the various advertising programs can be built.

The second step in the system calls for similar cooperative efforts between the RCA companies and other Lord & Thomas and Logan accounts, for the purpose of "pooling" any common advertising interests. An example would be a Lucky Strike advertisement picturing a Radio star smoking a cigarette of that brand.

1,000 Theatres Net $350,000 For NVA's Sanitorium Fund

Easter week showing the NVA film, "Stolen Jools" has resulted in 1,000 theatres collecting $350,000 from the public for the Saranac Lake sanitorium campaign. The remaining 1,200 houses which booked the short have not yet filed collection reports.

Collections averaged $300 per theatre.

Another Try at "Quiet" in Germany

TELEVISION IS FOUND IMPRACTICAL FOR WIDE USE IN ITS PRESENT STAGE

Held Very Remote from Theatre and Stage

Will Not Be a Sizeable Factor in Amusements in This Generation, John E. Otterson Says

Television in its present stage of development is economically and mechanically impracticable for widespread usage, MOTION PICTURE HERALD learns from sources close to the inside laboratory circle of big electrics.

Some advancement is expected within the next two or three years which may pave the way for a partial invasion of the home, but television in its relation to the theatre and motion picture studio is very remote.

Regular broadcasting of television images by usual methods would require a frequency band 4,000,000 cycles wide—equivalent to 400 ordinary broadcast channels—which in itself is impractical because it would necessitate practically complete monopolization of transmitting channels.

Further verifying the foregoing statements, John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, a Western Electric-A. T. & T. affiliate, this week said "not in your lifetime or mine" will television become a sizeable amusement factor. "Even if it should become commercial," Otterson predicted, "I see in its development no menace to the theatre."

Some Minor Inroads in Home Field Expected to Materialize in the Next Two or Three Years

Gannett, an important factor in television development for American Telephone & Telegraph, outlines the surface workings of television transmission and their relations to the quality of images.

By D. K. GANNETT

American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

In the processes usually employed in telephotography, the picture may be considered to be divided into a large number of small, equal-sized elements like a mosaic. Unlike the human eye, which sees the whole picture at once, the electrical eye of the transmitting machine is focused on only one element at a time, passing rapidly along row after row of elements until the whole picture has been scanned. As each element is viewed in turn, an electrical signal is sent out whose strength corresponds to the average shade of that element. Upon reception of the signals, the receiving apparatus re-creates the picture elements one at a time, painting each dark or light as directed by the electric signals, and arranges them in the proper order to form a picture similar to that viewed by the transmitter.

It is apparent that, in such a system, picture details smaller or closer together than

PARAMOUNT PUBLIX WILL PROTECT $130,000,000 THEATRE INVESTMENT

Between 60 and 70 Films Planned by Company

Public, Says Kent, to Have Voice in Judging Type Of Attraction

By ERNEST A. ROVELSTAD

In the Paramount Publix schedule for 1931-32 will be "virtually every type of worthwhile attraction with which Adolph Zukor has been associated."

Atlantic City (QP)—"Paramount Publix is looking for only peace and harmony, but it is determined to protect its $130,000,000 investment in theatres."

That statement by Sam Katz, vice-president in charge of Publix theatres, was a highlight of the annual convention here of the sales department of Paramount Publix.

Katz' statement proved of particular interest in view of the Paramount-Warner situation in which a truce is near, according to lobby reports.

Katz further said that "Paramount Publix has no chip on its shoulder. Nor is it looking for a fight, but at the same time it is not running away from any fight. The company is looking for only peace and harmony, but it is determined to protect its $130,000,000 investment in theatres.

"One of the important factors in self protection is the development of manpower," Katz said, adding that the theatre manager knows his community and his people, and that Paramount is determined to give its theatre operators every support.

Double-featuring, Katz declared, is being tried in Publix theatres as an experiment.

Among the other outstanding declarations of Paramount were:

SIDNEY R. KENT—Paramount will let the public define the type of at least one-third of its pictures for the coming season. Star series are barred.

GEORGE E. AKERSON—Pictures and advertising must be clean or adverse legislation is inevitable.

That Paramount is amplifying the policy initiated last year of giving the public a voice in production, was pointed out by Kent in announcing that only 40 of its program of 65 to 70 pictures are definitely set.

The public reaction to these will determine the nature of the remainder and the total will be increased if the public wants more. Nor will any star be limited to a given number of pictures.

The company does not intend to be "hog-tied" to a production schedule and the product announcement is not to be considered as a part of any contract for the pictures outlined in it.

More definitely set are the short feature plan, which call for 36 two-reel comedies, 100 single reel subjects and 104 issues of Paramount sound news.

Akerson told the convention that one little slip in the standard of advertising may place the entire industry in turmoil.

Included in next season's feature Paramount schedule are:

"Girls About Town," featuring Paul Lukas, Kay Francis and Lilyan Tashman in an original romance about a battle of wits between a wealthy Paris boulevardier and a pair of clever and well-exploited sisters who have brought their expert gold-digging racket from America.

"Secrets of a Secretary," featuring Claudette Colbert in the romance of a social secretary.

"Strangers and Lovers," featuring Carman Barnes and Tom Douglas. Directde by Richard Wallace. A tale of a girl who is afraid she is wicked.

"A Farewell to Arms," featuring Gary Cooper and Eleanor Boardman in a talking version of Ernest Hemingway's novel, story of a young American officer and a nurse who

This is the way Buck weighs his also-famous steed, Silver, to see if the cinch-line should be reduced for those Columbia Westerns.*

INGENUE. Youthful Marian Marsh (being so well recommended by Nature), is not only opposite John Barrymore in Warner Brothers' "Svengali," but will be similarly cast in Barrymore's next, "The Mad Genius."

$2,600,000 PATHE LOSS IN 1930; HEAVY SELLING HITS FILM STOCKS

Pathe Statement Reveals Equity Worth $14.38 a Share if Present Assets Were Liquidated

Net value of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in liquidation, was $3,500,000 on December 27, 1930, after bond and preferred stock obligations, according to a pro forma consolidated balance sheet of the company made public late this week.

The balance sheet, certified by Price, Waterhouse & Company, accompanying the annual report of the company, gives effect to the deal under which the company's operating assets were sold to the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation on January 5, 1931. It gives effect, also, to an appraisal of the value of Pathe Exchange's interest in the Pathe-DuPont Manufacturing Company at $4,000,000.

The operating statement accompanying the report of the 52-week period ending December 27, 1930, shows an operating loss of $2,007,771, plus a loss of $637,518, resultant from "loss on sale of certain assets to Radio-Keith-Orpheum and the write-off of production, scenario and treatment costs of pictures abandoned as a result of the sale." Much of this item is reported to be undistributed studio costs incurred during 1930, and is the alleged cause of the differences between Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the board, and E. B. Derr, former president.

The most interesting item in the report is the revelation of an equity of $3,500,000, which, were the company to be liquidated without further cost on the basis of present

Doubts Raised by Dividend Omissions Unsettle All Picture Stocks Along with Other Fields

By THE ANALYST

Doubts raised by the recent wave of dividend omissions and cuts in all classes of stocks spread to amusement shares during the past week, bringing heavy selling into issues on which maintenance of present dividend rates are questioned in financial quarters and unsettling the list of picture stocks generally.

Fox and Paramount were prominent bear targets, the former being pounded down to a new low for the year on expectations that the new directors expected to be elected April 15 would make a downward revision in the annual $4 disbursement. Election of these officers was deferred, until May 1 at an adjourned meeting at which Harley Clarke, president, scouted the dividend change rumors.

Fox has encountered steady pressure since announcement of its refinancing plan and the downward movement gained impetus as date for the annual meeting approached.

Paramount dropped more than 4 points on rumors that directors will reduce the $4 annual dividend to $3 at their next meeting in view of the reported decrease in earnings for the first quarter of this year. However, it has been estimated that the forthcoming earnings report for the period will show that company has earned the dividend, with a reported net profit for the three months equal to $1.20 a share.

WARNERS TO FOLLOW PARAMOUNT, FOX IN BUILDING AUSTRALIAN CHAIN

Ralph Clark's Statement a Tip-off on Expansion

Low Building Costs and High Rate On Home Office Remittances Are Influencing Factors

Sydney (QP)—That Warners are planning heavy expansion in Australian theatre fields is made apparent by a statement by Ralph Clark, head of the company in Australasia. While a definite announcement of this policy is withheld, the nature of Clark's remarks dispels all doubts but that, before long, much of the Warner profits derived from this country will remain here in securing important theatre holdings. What makes such a move particularly attractive to Warners, despite a current dearth in pictures, are the facts that theatre property can now be purchased at rock-bottom prices, and that the exchange rate is costing distributors $150 in every $500 on remittances to home offices. Moreover, an improvement in the exchange rate seems a long way off.

Entrance of Warners into the field on a wholesale scale follows recent activities of Paramount and Fox in buying up properties in the Antipodes.

Clark's statement refers to the effect of the world-wide depression on Australia and the consequent property speculations offered. He believes that the depression period will eventually lift, when the boom period will set in; and he suggests that owners who secured their holdings cheaply in the lean periods will clean up. He concluded: "Every depression the world has ever known has brought a business boom in its wake. It is a matter of tiding over for the time being to enjoy good times later, and Warners are determined to make the most of the present opportunities."

Some weeks ago, Warners obtained an outlet for their product in the Fuller houses on a leasing arrangement; it is believed that they will go one further and negotiate for a straight purchase. The Fuller houses number nearly 60.

Clark and Sir Benjamin Fuller sail for America on the "Niagara" on April 30. Clark's mission being to attend his company's annual convention, and Fuller's, confabs directly with the Warner chiefs of New York.

Allied Member In Protection Battle With Publix-B & K

Chicago (QP)—The right of zone protection, which Allied would not recognize, is being claimed by one of its members in a neighborhood battle over product between the small Lasker string and Publix-B. & K. The latter's new house, the Nortown, has been given "C" classification, which would set its pictures ahead of Lasker's Ridge, playing first week of general release. Lasker claims a contract clause assuring protection over any new houses erected in the Ridge territory, and demands that either the Nortown be set back, or the Ridge be moved ahead.

No action has been taken by the Illinois Independent Theatre Owners, Allied unit, pending further investigation. Al Steffes is said to have examined the Lasker contract when here, but has given out no statement. President Aaron Saperstein has declared that numerous considerations had a bearing on the clause, intimating that the Lasker claim is not entirely clear.

The Ridge is in a similar dispute with the Essaness Devon, booked through Midwest, over priority rights on M-G-M product.

Darrow in Films, Making a Feature For Carl Laemmle

Clarence Darrow, one of the nation's front-page "names," will appear in films, as exclusively announced in MOTION PICTURE HERALD four weeks ago.

Carl Laemmle has signed Darrow for a feature called, "Mystery of Life," a dramatic film on evolution, for which considerable scientific research material already has been collected by Samuel Cummins and Milton Kolb.

Darrow has been working on the story with H. M. Parshley, zoology professor at Smith College. Laemmle predicts "it will be the most controversial film ever released."

Chaplin to Make "Liliom"

Berlin—Charles Chaplin, now touring Europe, has indicated to friends here that Molnar's "Liliom" will be his next silent. Hans Albers, one of Berlin's more prominent screen and stage players, is understood to have tentatively agreed to star.

Production, of course, would be in Hollywood.

Weeks on Coast on Sono Art Series of Thrill-O-Dramas

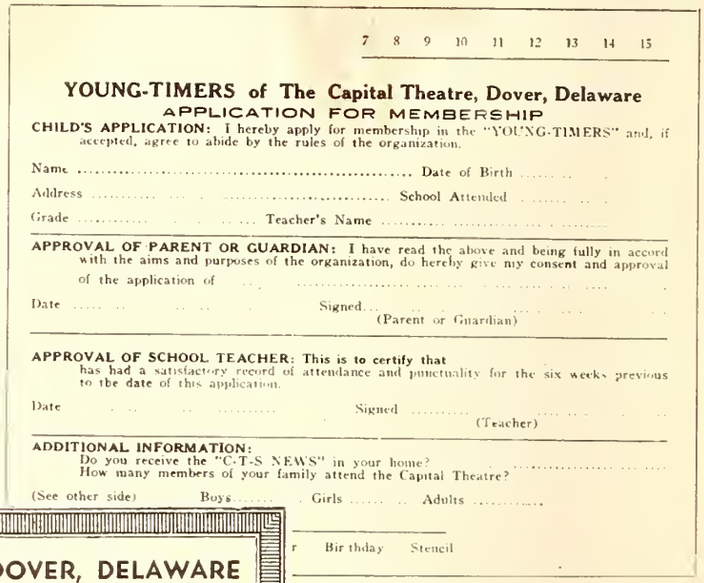
Hollywood—George W. Weeks, producer of the Thrill-O-Dramas, released by Sono Art-World Wide, will supervise the series upon his arrival this week from New York.

He will first cast "First Aid," from an original story by Mike Simmons.

Lesser In New York

Sol Lesser, recently appointed executive associate of Carl Laemmle, arrived in New York this week from the Coast.

A Civic Appeal for Children Patronage



What the Capital did to win the youngsters--and parents and teachers, too!

THE theatre is well filled, and one notices that an unusually large number of the afternoon's patrons are children. Some tawney heads scarcely show over the backs of the chairs. Some of the youngsters are almost young men and women—15 years old! But most are between seven and 15. And all are very quiet.

The organ sounds the introduction to "Stars and Stripes Forever," and the youngsters come to their feet. Then, to the rousing tune and beat of the Sousa march, Boy Scouts stride down an aisle, carrying Old Glory to the stage, a spotlight illuminating the flag against the darkness. The emblem is ceremoniously saluted, and a verse of "America" is sung. It is the Young Timers own prologue to their own show, as presented at the Capital theatre in Dover, Del., in what has proved to be an extremely effective special appeal for children patronage.

It is an appeal made directly to the children but so organized as to win the sincere support of both parent and teacher. And the entire venture is conducted under the supervision of the Director of Young People's Activities, a position filled by Assistant Manager G. Park Weaver. The character of a "stunt," or exploitation scheme, is avoided. Young Timers is designed as a permanent organization. An educational organization as well as one for good times. Nothing cute about it. No "Kiddie Klub." Instead, Young Timers—a name studiously chosen to preclude any impression of childishness, and therefore, of meretricious nonsense.

Any young person in Dover between seven and 15 years old can join—providing he meets certain conditions. In other words, one cannot be a member without making an effort.

One is given to understand that Young Timers is too worth while for that. To be a Young Timer a youngster must first apply for membership (no effort is made by the theatre to acquire new members), his membership must have the approval of his teachers (for his school work must be up to standard) and also of his parents (who must testify as to his good standing at both school and home). Besides the regular members, there are honorary members, and it is planned to "graduate" those reaching the age of 16 to associate memberships.

Membership applications are given each week to the first few boys and girls of proper age who purchase tickets for the regular Saturday matinee. Their applications are turned in during the week, and if approved, the new members are admitted free to the next matinee, when, at the conclusion of the show, they are initiated.

"Pop" Weaver

It is not called initiation, however. The management shrewdly saw in the word initiation associations with uncomfortable experiences generally believed to be involved in lodge or fraternity initiations, so the word "reception" is substituted. Membership must be renewed at intervals, so the members are bound to keep in good standing at school and at home if they are to continue to enjoy the privileges of the cl

These privileges include free admission for those who hold cards bearing the lucky numbers chosen each week. Leaders and workers (officers and those who help them) are also admitted to the matinee free. Then each member receives a pass on his birthday—the pass being, however, not for himself, but for another person when accompanied by the Old Timer exercising this privilege, who has to pay for his admission.

THEATRE AD RATES IN L. A. DAILIES TOP OTHER FIELDS BY HALF MILLION YEARLY

Receive Proportionately Less Publicity

Industry Pays Higher for Its Newspaper Space Than Do Autos or Finance

Los Angeles (QP)—An indication of the extent to which the motion picture theatres of the country are penalized when buying advertising space in the newspapers is found in the rate chart for Los Angeles metropolitan papers compiled by the West Coast Theatres publicity department.

The West Coast figures reveal that in every case motion picture rates far exceed those charged for financial and automotive advertising.

The charts also reveal that motion picture exhibitors receive far less publicity in relation to the amount of advertising purchased than either financial or sports advertisers. Automotive advertisers receive less free publicity but buy far less space and pay less for it, according to the West Coast charts.

Complete Rate Structure Chart

A discussion, entitled "An Explanation of Charts on Motion Pictures Rate Situation, Los Angeles Newspapers," includes a rate structure chart, a comparison of the total rate space, free publicity and total rate for all Los Angeles newspapers for one week, a discussion of the inequality of the rate structure, a comparison of costs for 1,000 circulation for various classifications and a chart covering the cost of motion picture advertising space for 1930 at present motion picture rates compared with commercial rates.

Under the rate structure chart, it is shown than an inch of space purchased in all Los Angeles newspapers at financial rates would cost $19.57, at the commercial rate, $26.04 and at the motion picture rate $33.81. Newspapers included are the Examiner, Times, Express, Herald, Record and Illustrated Daily News.

"The motion picture rate is the only rate which has a per inch cost higher than the national, or commercial rate," the comment reads. "It is the highest rate paid by advertisers with the exception of the rate paid for political advertising.

"The reason generally assigned for this premium motion picture rate is the publicity run with it."

Comparative Publicity Given

Chart No. 2, dealing with space over a period of a week, reveals that financial advertisers bought 5,750 lines of advertising and received 13,000 inches of free space. Sports advertisers bought less than 500 inches and received 14,500 inches. The automotive industry bought 3,500 inches and received 2,000 inches of free space. Motion picture advertisers bought 7,000 inches and received approximately that much space in free publicity.

In the discussion which follows, it is pointed out that motion picture publicity has general news value, just as financial and sports publicity have. A world premier of a motion picture is favorably compared with a prize fight, as far as news value is concerned. It is claimed that "automotive news does not contain the essential news elements of the other classifications."

The rate structure chart shows that the motion picture rate in the Times is 73 per cent higher than the financial rate, 41 per cent higher than the automotive rate and 66 per cent higher than the net automotive rate. In the Examiner, the ratio is 88, 23 and 44 per cent. In the Express it is 40 per cent higher than the net automotive rate. In the Herald, it is 90, 25 and 47 per cent higher, respectively; in the Record, 30, 22 and 44, and in the News, 62, 62, and 90 per cent higher, respectively.

Point Out Unfairness

"When one considers that in one newspaper it costs the motion picture industry $1.90 for the same space purchased by commercial advertisers, the unfairness can be seen," is the comment.

"It also can be seen that the motion picture industry is paying a heavy toll for the drama page, particularly when other competitive classifications are receiving sections with a similar volume of publicity without paying premium rates."

Cost per 1,000 circulation are as follows:

	Financial	Automotive	Motion Picture
TIMES	.022	.027	.038
EXAMINER	.020	.030	.036
EXPRESS	.024	.033	.033
HERALD	.020	.030	.037
RECORD	.025	.026	.033
NEWS	.028	.028	.045

The comment is that "this chart emphasizes again the premium rates being exacted from the motion picture industry."

In a chart of comparison of costs, it is shown that based on space placed in 1930 at present rates, the net cost of space was $1,562,027. At commercial rates, the cost would have been $1,067,710. The surplus at motion picture rates over regular commercial rates amounts to 46 per cent.

"The motion picture industry was penalized $500,000 or, in other words, paid almost one-half more for the same volume of space which might have been purchased by other buyers," the comment reads.

The discussion points out that other buyers include those who compete directly with the motion picture industry.

New Device Takes "Pictures" of Voice

Considerable interest in university and high school circles is evidenced in a new device developed by W. O. Osbon, of Westinghouse Research Laboratories, which claims that a "picture" of voices and sound can be given clearly, making it possible for observers to distinguish the "pure" from the compound notes or tones which are heard by the human ear.

The photo shows the "moving talkies" which reveals the "high and low" spots of voice.

Bank Scheme Revival

London—The creation of a loans corporation to assist independent British producers, which fell through last year because of lack of prestige behind it, has been revived with the arrival of a Colonial banker.

It is proposed to form a co-operative bank to advance credits against good contracts, now refused by British banks. It is understood important names are behind the idea.

Film Tax Killing Golden Goose of Argentine Trade

Washington (QP)—Killing the goose that laid the golden eggs has proved to be more than a mere fable in Argentina. An increase of 1,700 per cent in the import duty on foreign films has resulted in the closing down of native distributors for U. S. films.

The motion picture business was the only prosperous industry in Argentina, the world depression having greatly reduced the demand for agricultural products, on which Argentina's foreign trade depends.

Seeing the prosperity of the film trade, the Argentine government felt it only fair that the prosperous lines of business should turn over some of their profits to the government to make up in part the loss in revenue from other sources. So a big tariff duty was slapped on films.

Officials of the Argentina embassy in Washington declare there was no ulterior motive in the increase of duty. They like American pictures in Argentina and have no desire to bar them out or limit their distribution. The tariff was a revenue measure only, and the results that followed were not anticipated.

Theatres in Argentina have closed in protest against the tariff, according to information reaching Washington. While considerably perturbed over the increased rate, officials here can do nothing to induce Argentina to lower the tariff, since there is no discrimination apparent, the same rate applying to films from all countries. But confidence is expressed that the Argentine government voluntarily in the near future will amend its tariff so that, while slightly increased revenue can be obtained, there will be no cause for the film companies to withdraw from the market.

All Plants to Bar Hectic Invasion of Lots

Agree That Competent Agents Have Important Function But Protest Overactivity of "Army"

The Producer-versus-Agent situation in Hollywood, one of the most acute problems in production circles today, is now to result most pointedly and flatly in classification of the agent as a "solicitor."

The studios are free to admit that the competent agent has an important function to perform. His usefulness is admitted without argument. On the other hand, they are as frank to state that the activity of the agents for some time has been overdone to the point where the economy and security of production work are seriously threatened.

When a studio works on the basis of a budget of over twenty million dollars a year, or approximately a cost of seventy thousand dollars a day, it is apparent that production delays are costly matters, even those of minutes only. A recent case reported of an agent who interrupted sound stage production for half an hour while he discussed with the leading player a job in another studio is but one of almost daily happenings.

The number of agents in Hollywood is estimated at one hundred and six—a small army large enough to impede seriously the wheels of production if a fair proportion of them are active on the lots each day.

The studios have decided that the situation is acute and that immediate action is imperative.

They propose to make no heroic gesture. They will, however, classify agents as solicitors, to be regarded strictly in the category of jewelry, radio, insurance and other salesmen and advertising solicitors.

The bars are now to be put up against all solicitation at the studios. Fox took this step some time ago. Warners and First National put the rule strictly in force, beginning the first of the year. Universal has just followed suit and United Artists set April 15 as the date after which solicitors will be denied entrance. Other studios are expected to make the ban complete soon.

It is pointed out that there is a wide difference between the legitimate function of responsible agents with proper studio executives and the indiscriminate and hectic solicitation on the lots by an army of overactive agents. That is the type to which the studios strenuously object.

Paramount Forbids Agents to Deal Direct with Talent

Hollywood—Business agents must make all appointments with studio executives rather than direct with talent, according to Paramount instructions, just issued.

Agents like the idea as it is recognition for them, and the producers believe it will speed up production by eliminating solicitation of supervisors, players and directors.

Blame Trans Lux Stock Rumors on "Propagandists"

Denial of strained relations between Trans Lux Daylight Screen and A. M. Andrews, of J. M. Mulford & Co., distributors of Trans Lux stock, was made this week by executives of Mulford, following reports that Percy N. Furber, chairman of Trans Lux, had demanded Andrews' resignation from the Trans Lux board.

Furber, who is president of Trans Lux Screen, which with RKO owns Trans Lux theatres, sent to Andrews a letter in which Furber voiced a most optimistic opinion of the future of Trans Lux and the newsreel circuit. Mulford broadcast the letter to prospective stock purchasers, which, it is reported, started a battle between Andrews and Furber, who claimed a breach of confidence in using his personal message for advertising the stock.

Furber followed-up the Mulford sales letter with a second letter to the same list, in which he stated:

"I wrote a letter to my co-director, A. M. Andrews, expressing my personal views just after the opening of the new Trans Lux theatre. Through a misunderstanding, J. M. Mulford & Co. had this letter photostatted and sent out with circulars prepared by them for use in the sale of Trans Lux Daylight Screen Corp. stock" and "I wish to remove any possible impression arising from the use of my letter that I personally, or the company of which I am president, have any connection with J. M. Mulford & Co., or the statements contained in their literature."

Andrews could not be reached for a statement, but an executive of the Mulford company, in denying that the "misunderstanding" had caused a split, admitted that broadcasting of Furber's letter for Trans Lux stock advertising had caused unpleasantness but insisted that "reports crediting Furber with demanding resignation of Andrews from the Trans Lux board are unfounded." These rumors were started by unfriendly propagandists who are attempting to lower value of Trans Lux stock for manipulation purposes."

mpracticability Of Television By Regular Methods

e size of one picture element cannot be operly transmitted. The finest details hich may be sent are such as would make ternate picture elements dark and light. he electric signals which would be sent it as these elements are transmitted would alternately strong and weak, a cycle be- g sent for each two elements. The fre- ency of this current would therefore be e number of picture elements being sent r second divided by two. Where the de- il is coarser, the frequency would be lower. It is necessary, therefore, to be able to ansmit from the sending to the receiving paratus all frequencies up to that corre- onding to the finest detail—a frequency ual to the number of picture elements per cond divided by two. If the wire line or e radio channel over which the currents e sent cannot transmit as high a frequency this, the received picture will appear arser, just as though the picture had been ided into larger elements in the first ce. No matter how nearly perfect the ding and receiving apparatus, therefore, better picture can be received than that mitted by the frequency band which can sent from the sending to the receiving nt.

This is true equally of telephotography l of television. The principal difference ween the two is in the speed of trans- ssion. In telephotography, several minutes y be taken to transmit a picture, but in evision, as in moving picture projection, is necessary to present to the observer out 16 complete pictures per second, in ler to give the illusion of motion. This ans that each picture can contain only the ail which can be transmitted in 1/16 of econd.

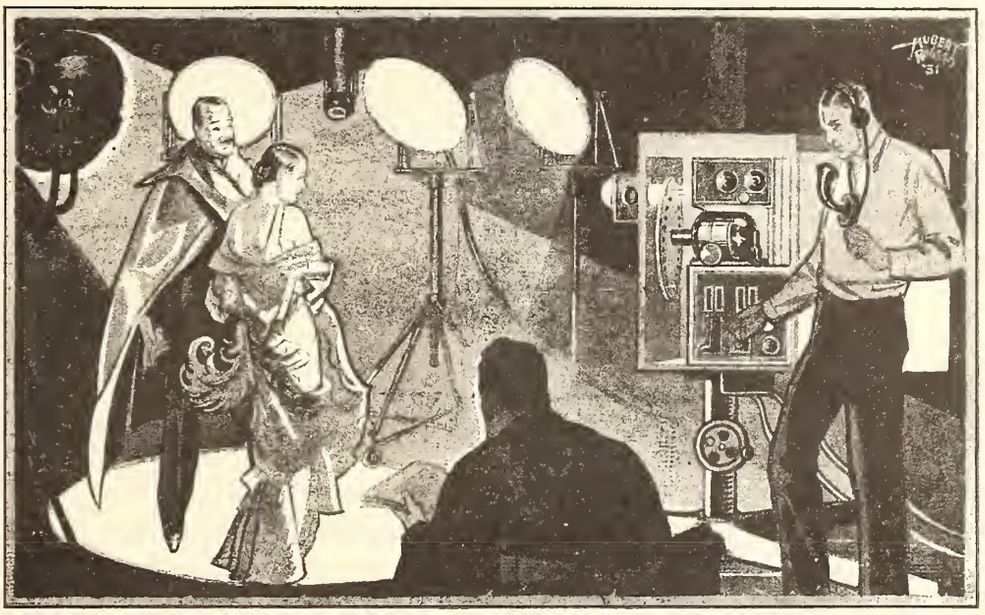
16 Pictures a Second

Suppose, for example, that an ordinary kc. radio broadcasting channel is to be ed for television purposes. With the usual oadcasting methods, the total channel dth is divided between two sidebands ich are transmitted from the radio trans- tter so that the highest frequency which uld be transmitted to the television re- ving apparatus from the radio receiving is determined by the width of one side- nd, which is 5,000 cycles. Since each cle represents two picture elements, the mber of picture elements which could be ceived is 10,000 in a second, or 625 in 16 of a second. No matter how good the evision apparatus, therefore, no better ality picture could be obtained than one ntaining 625 elements, or about 22 by 28 ments.

Television pictures of about this quality e illustrated in the pictures in Figure 2, owing a portrait, a single figure and a oup of figures as they would appear when nt over an ordinary radio broadcasting annel. These may be compared with the otographs of Figure 1, which show how portrait and the group in the prizefight g appear when divided into 250,000 ele- nts instead of only some 625. To broad- st such pictures as television images would uire a frequency band 4,000,000 cycles wide—equivalent to 400 ordinary broadcast channels. It will be seen that the pictures in Figure 2 are so lacking in detail that they are no more than barely recognizable.

Figures 3, 4 and 5 show the same pictures as they appear when divided into greater numbers of elements than Figure 2, so as to have more detail. The pictures in Figure 3 have 1250 elements each and would require 20,000 cycles or two broadcast channels with ordinary broadcast methods. By special methods of broadcasting whereby only one of the sidebands is transmitted from the radio transmitter, the necessary frequency band could be cut in half, so that Figure 3 could be sent over a single broadcast channel. Figures 4 and 5 have 6250 and 12,500 elements, and would require 10 and 20 broadcast channels, respectively, when ordinary broadcast methods are employed. By using the special single sideband method of broadcasting, the same results could be obtained over a channel equal to five broadcast channels in the case of Figure 4 and 10 broadcast channels in the case of Figure 5.

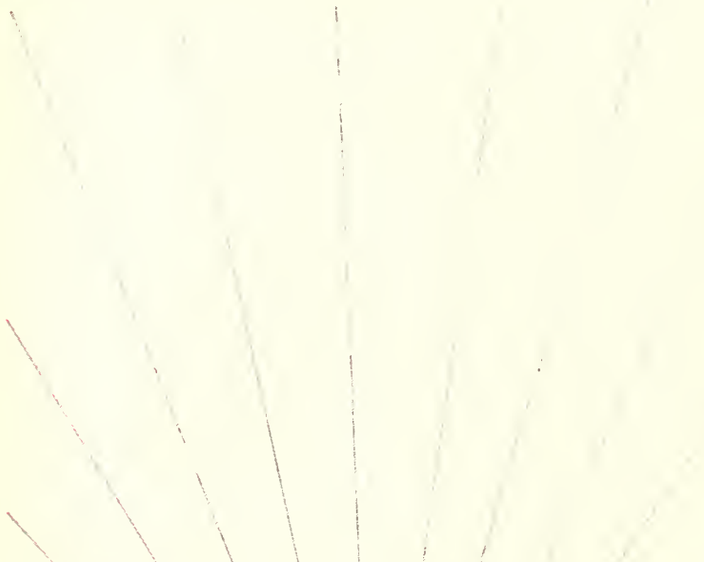
Special Single Sideband



The apparatus demonstrated in May of 1927 used a scanning disc of 50 holes and transmitted about 2000 elements. In fineness, therefore, the image would be slightly better than that of Figure 3. With similar transmitting apparatus, the image of Figure 2 would require a disc of only 28 holes and that of Figure 3, one of 39. With the more recent two-way television apparatus, the disc has 72 holes. Some 4400 elements are transmitted, which give a picture of slightly less detail than that of figure 4. The disc required to transmit the image of Figure 4 would have needed 88 holes, and that for the image of Figure 5, comprising about 12,500 elements, would have had 125 holes.

The illustrations were actually made by transmission as telephotographs, using apparatus in an American Telephone and Telegraph Company telephotograph station. A picture element in a telephotograph is 1/100 of an inch square, so it was only necessary to reduce the size of the pictures until they would contain the right number of elements of this size. The pictures in Figure 2, for example, were each reduced to a length of 9/32 inch. After transmission as telephotographs, the pictures were enlarged by an enlarging camera to the size shown.

It is interesting that in comparing the three pictures in any one of the illustrations with each other, the picture of the group in the prizefight ring is about as satisfactory as the portrait or the football runner, even though the same number of picture elements is called upon to depict a larger number of objects. It appears that when several objects are being observed some psychological factor causes one to expect and be satisfied with fewer details in each object. Another matter of interest is that in television a somewhat more pleasing effect is obtained than can be represented by still pictures, because the eye in following the movements in the television scene, is less aware of the streaks caused by dividing the image into rows of elements.



From this set of pictures, it is possible to gauge the possibilities of the transmission of television scenes as limited by the width of the frequency band transmitted. Figure 2 shows the rather crude results which are obtainable over a broadcast channel using present broadcasting methods, and the other figures show various improvements in quality which can be obtained by the use of wider frequency bands and the present methods.

2,000 Theatres Will Benefit by Cuts in Sound Servicing Fees

Western Electric Accounts Paying Above $15 Minimum Charge Will Receive $5 Slash

Charges for servicing Erpi sound machines will be reduced immediately. The reduction, which was exclusively forecast in MOTION PICTURE HERALD five weeks ago, will approximate $750,000 annually and follows a formal appeal by M. A. Lightman, president, and other MPTOA chiefs who met in New York last month to discuss a reduction with C. W. Bunn, general sales manager of Electrical Research.

C. W. Bunn

The $15 minimum service charge will continue, but, as predicted in the HERALD story, cuts of $5 weekly will be made in certain instances where charges of $25, $30 and $35 are paid.

The Erpi order is retroactive to April 11, and affects 2,000 theatres, 1,000 of which will hereafter pay $15 instead of $20, the remaining 1,000 paying $20 and $25 instead of $30 and $35, respectively.

M. A. Lightman

On March 14, it was pointed out in the initial forecast on March 14 that practically unknown to exhibitor leaders, Erpi executives had anticipated a request for service reductions and had commenced to mould its field staff into a more concentrated form, eliminating many posts, thereby cutting operating costs of servicing. Reorganization of the Erpi field staff began several months ago.

The general run of complaints on servicing charges hinged around what is declared to be the "better deal" accorded more recent buyers of sound machines who benefit by lower service fees in line with the lower price scale of talker devices, several cuts in the latter having been made since sound's inception. "Veteran" sound users claim that they paid more for their machines two and three years ago, which they say is okay, but they cannot understand why their servicing rate should remain higher than that of the new sound "converts."

Paramount Closing Product Booking Deal with Warners

Paramount will shortly conclude a booking contract with Warners which will reinstate Warner-First National product over the complete Publix circuit, it is understood.

With conclusion of negotiations, there will be an end to the difficulties which have existed for the past year between the two companies.

admitted to the matinee. Those over 12 are admitted at regular children's prices at all performances—provided they are wearing their badge. Special privileges are granted from time to time, such as reduced admission prices to members for special educational pictures, participation in vacation activities, and so on. Young Timers, moreover, are given advance notice of coming attractions, and also souvenir gifts at Christmas time and similar occasions.

This close supervision and the many activities of the organization, both in and outside the theatre, naturally entail many responsibilities on the part of the Capital's management—on that of Director Weaver in particular. Showmen wishing to adopt the Capital idea (and it is a capital idea!) will want to know just what system is used in keeping track of it all.

The method is to keep a comprehensive card index system. There is a membership file alphabetically arranged according to name (application cards are designed to make this index easily kept). Besides being a record, this index serves also as a mailing list for special occasions. Then there is a birthday file, one card for each day in the year. A glance on the card for a certain day tells just what members are to receive the birthday privileges for that day.

Membership cards are also kept by number, assisting in finding the owners of any lost cards that are found, and facilitating the checking up of those who have been admitted free through having won in the "lucky number" drawing.

One of the three avowed purposes of the organization is to encourage and help talented children to take part in stage programs at the matinees, representing one phase of the effort of the management to win parent and teacher cooperation. Any special talent of an applicant is noted on his card. Play the piano? Sing? Act? For a stage entertainment is frequently given following the regular matinee performance.

In arranging these stage entertainments, the assistance of other organizations are sought. The Camp Fire Girls may present the entertainment one day on a theme representative of their club. On another, the 4-H Club may give a dramatic representation of its activities.

Even adult societies are asked to help in this effort of the Capital "to stimulate an appreciation of the better kind of entertainment" and reward decorum and industry at home and at school. One organization, the Dover Century Club, helps regularly, members acting as chaperones at the matinees. A record is kept of all outside organizations and their officers who cooperate.

Thus does the Capital's Young Timers club reach quite beyond the immediate interests of the theatre—and therefore serves them the better. This is in the spirit of the venture. Director Weaver, in his letters to parents, puts it this way:

"In organizing the Young-Timers, we had in mind something much larger than a mere 'movie club.' We are planning a series of activities which will be of interest to every child and every parent. Those children who have special talent may have the opportunity of appearing on the stage and thus receive valuable training and experience. We hope you will encourage your child to take an active part in club work so long as such activities do not interfere with the child's home duties and school work."

And he reports that, young though Young Timers is, it is already paying dividends not only in the increased patronage of children, but in that of their parents as well.

Dividend Slashes Start Selling of Many Film Issues

during the early part of the week, was unsettled by the drives against Fox and Paramount and sold off later. Sentiment toward the stock has changed for the better since its recent dip to a new low, largely because of reports that papers in the booking deal with Paramount had been drawn up and were ready to be signed.

RKO and Eastman Kodak were bright spots in the stock exchange picture, the former holding in a fractional range close to the previous week's final level, while Kodak displayed rallying tendencies resulting largely from buying based on reports that MGM will use its new super-sensitive film exclusively. RKO was afforded its usual recent sponsorship and held up well in a reactionary market.

General Theaters and Loew's averaged about a point lower, while Consolidated Flm showed little change. The latter's report for the first quarter, issued during the week, showed net profit of $537,940, compared with $667,158 in the first three months of 1930. These earnings are after a plant write off of approximately $200,000. The quarter's earnings are 58 cents per share on all classes, showing Consolidated more than earned in the quarter the 50-cent common dividend which the directors passed some years ago to conserve cash. Pathe common and A stock tapered.

A sharp break in General Theatres convertible 6s featured trading in the picture bonds. The issue's action was a direct reflection of the selling pressure on Fox A and General Theatres shares—and loss for the week amounted to around 10 points. Pathe 7s dropped off somewhat, but other amusement bonds were steady, fractionally higher levels ruling in Loew's 6s, ex-warrants, and Paramount issues. Warners convertible 6s eased slightly.

20 Millions Represented in New Educational-Tiffany Combine

Young Scouts Report of Quitting Picture Business, Becoming Educational Board Member

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, tendered a luncheon Wednesday to the press to announce officially the reorganization of Tiffany.

Educational remains a separate entity, handling only short features; Tiffany and World Wide amalgamate for feature production and distribution.

L. A. Young, however, who has been president of Tiffany, becomes a member of the board of directors of Educational, and "will remain in the motion picture industry with my shoulder to the wheel," despite reports that the loss he had taken (estimated at $6,000,000) had created an estrangement.

The reorganization, it is said, involves $20,000,000 in assets.

Stanley Hatch of the Educational forces will join Bud Rogers of World Wide in the sale of features. The physical merger of Educational, Tiffany and World Wide is set for May 2.

Official announcement of the merger was made by Hammons, Young and Grant L. Cook, vice-president of Tiffany.

"Under the agreement," Educational states, "the sales, exploitation, and distribution activities of Tiffany will be taken over by the enlarged organization within a few weeks. One exchange system will operate for the physical distribution of Educational, Tiffany and World Wide Pictures, Educational's exchanges being retained for this purpose, except in a few locations where the Tiffany exchange offers more adequate space or greater adaptability. Production of pictures still to be made on the current Tiffany program will go forward immediately, through a newly formed corporation known as Tiffany Productions of California, Inc., Ltd., of which Mr. Hammons is president.

"Educational's policy of dealing in short features exclusively will in no way be affected by this arrangement . Educational will take over the handling of the short subjects on Tiffany's program, leaving Tiffany and World Wide dealing in full length feature pictures only, and Educational specializing in short subjects as it has been doing for more than a decade.

"A separate feature sales force will handle the sale of the Tiffany and World Wide feature subjects, operating out of Educational's branches in the United States, but maintaining the Tiffany identity. This feature sales force, which will be of much greater strength than either Tiffany or World Wide has had heretofore, through the transfer of many of Tiffany's men to the new organization, will be ready to take the field on the day of the transfer of activities. This date will be announced later but will be some time within two to three weeks.

"Mr. Young will continue as president, and Mr. Cook as vice president of Tiffany Productions, Inc.

"Through this merging of Tiffany and World Wide sales activities a most important lineup of feature pictures is brought under one banner, including on the current season's schedule 27 Tiffany pictures."

"Roxy's" Position Is Finally Settled By Hiram Brown

The problem of what to do with "Roxy" after he got him, which confronted Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of National Broadcasting Company, has been officially solved by Hiram Brown, president of RKO. It is a theatre post at Radio City.

S. L. Rothafel

An official statement this week issued from the RKO offices announcing that Samuel Lionel Rothafel's activities were to be "in connection with the theatres to be operated by RKO in the new development, as well as RKO's radio broadcasting and other activities."

For some months, "Roxy" has been reported somewhat without portfolio in the Radio situation owing to the rumored difficulty on the part of Aylesworth in endeavoring to convince some of the higher electrical interest executives in the lofty background of the picture on giving the Broadway screen impresario full artistic command in the Radio City project. The breezes of Broadway whispered that there were those of influence who were unconvinced that the move was a gesture of sufficiently imposing character for the Radio City concept.

It has been, to observers of the career of this same mercurial and dynamic "Roxy," somewhat inevitable that he should turn up in some manner of connection with Radio City, since the fates have written him into every important screen theatre success story on Broadway, beginning with the Strand in 1914 and continuing up the street in the Rialto, Rivoli, Capitol and more recently, the Roxy.

Meanwhile, until in 1932 when Radio City is scheduled to open, Rothafel will continue broadcasting with his "Gang" over the NBC network.

Physical Merger of Fox And Loew's Is Remote

Harley L. Clarke's Film Securities Deal Proves Doubly Advantageous Following Court Decision

Last week's sale of Loew stock control by Fox to Film Securities Corp., for which Harley L. Clarke, Fox president, received $28,800,000 for long-term Fox financing, this week proved doubly advantageous when the United States Government declared the divestment satisfied its Clayton Act suit against Fox for the Loew purchase in 1928.

The Government's divestment order left Fox with no alternative but disposition of the 660,900 shares of Loew stock which gave Fox control of Loew-M-G-M.

A physical merger of Fox and Loew's, which has been discussed since the purchase of Loew's in 1928, is now held to be remote, despite the fact that the $73,800,000 Fox financing obtained last week places both corporations under identical financial sponsorship, in which the dominant factor is Chase Securities.

On Wesdnesday, the Department of Justice entered in U. S. District Court, N. Y., a consent decree approving the Loew stock sale by Fox to Film Securities. The original purchase in 1928 was held a violation of the Clayton Act.

In the decree, signed by Judge John C. Knox, Fox, and all of its officers, agents and employees are perpetually enjoined from acquiring, receiving, holding, voting or acting as the owners of stock in Loew's, directly, or indirectly.

"Thumbs Down" on Merger

Furthermore, the attorney general was authorized by the Justice Department to apply to the courts for "further appropriate remedy" if attempt should be made to lessen the "substantial competition" between Fox and Loew's. This is accepted by the industry as indicative of a "thumbs down" policy by the government regarding a merger between both companies.

The government's original suit, filed in

Fox "A" Rights to Be Traded Film Securities Organized;

Film Securities Corp., to which Fox Films turned over its block of 660,900 shares of Loew stock, for which it received about $29,000,000 cash, has been organized at Dover, Del., listing 665,000 shares of common stock.

Beginning April 20, Fox Film "A" will be traded ex-rights on the New York stock exchange, to be traded on a when-issued basis. Transactions must be settled by April 30. Rights expire May 12 and provide for purchase of the new $30,000,000 six per cent convertible debenture issue.

'MEET THE WIFE' COMEDY HIT

Laura LaPlante Heads Fine Cast

A delightful farce—naughty but nice. And though its theme may be the least bit suggestive, it never gets vulgar!

There is much running about and being found in bedrooms and such, that is very funny because the scenes are so well acted.

The action between husband number one and husband number two is riotously funny, by reason of the splendid work done by Lew Cody and Harry Myers as the author and second husband respectively. They are entirely natural, and both have the sympathy of the audience.

Joan Marsh is a charming little sister. The entire cast does fine work, and each character is so well drawn that he or she is essential to the story. Edgar Norton as the butler, and Claude Allister as Victor, aid materially in the fun. William Janney is okay as the reporter.

"Meet the Wife" Sparkling Comedy That Has Real Box Office Appeal

It takes a perfectly chosen cast and sparkling lines of humor to make a box office comedy. Both are to be found in this giggle and guffaw drama, "Meet the Wife," which is so capably directed by A. Leslie Pearce. There is no doubt that this production should hang up new box office records for comedy productions as it has every-thing that goes to make real enter-tainment. This is entertainment for the entire family and yet has the qual-ity that stamps it as material for Class A houses as well as the smaller the-atres.

This production, which will be given release through Columbia Pic-tures, will score at the box office in a large manner.—Edward V. Granville.

Party Husband

(First National)

Fast and Clever

The smart, fast-moving portrayal of the efforts of two newlyweds to maintain their individuality, makes "Party Husband" a pleasing presentation.

At times the dialogue seems a bit choppy, apparently the result of an effort to make it appear sophisticated, but as a whole is clever, witty and entertaining.

A light, whimsical vein of humor is threaded into the plot despite the grave consequences that arise from the inevitable separation of the pair.

When the husband, finding his wife on a steamer with another man, draws a gun to avenge his wronged feelings, then realizes his absurdity and throws the gun overboard with the remark, "The lady isn't worth it," the type of treatment that has been given the picture is apparent.

Acting honors are pretty evenly divided. Dorothy Mackaill is charming as usual in the role of the young wife who remains true to her husband, at heart, despite her philanderings. James Rennie gives a good portrayal of the husband, although his voice doesn't register evenly at all times.

Joe Donahue is briefly seen in the opening sequences, but manages to convince of his ability to clown. He deserves a much better part than the one given him.

Dorothy Peterson, Donald Cook, Helen Ware and Paul Porcasi all do nice work, reading their lines with considerable aptitude.

Trimmed down and with the dialogue patched, "Party Husband" might be high-class entertainment of the more worldly type.

Good musicals, comedy shorts needed with this.

Beyond Victory

(RKO Pathe)

Poor

It is too bad they had to fight the World War, for it is responsible for this conglomeration of artificial drama, pathos, humor and what-not. It is a mixed-up affair, pacifist in theme, and in acting, story, direction and other departments woefully amateurish. The film is hard on the ear-drums, for the shooting is incessant, stopping only long enough to allow for a little dialogue. Then it resumes, and although hundreds of shells fall all around a building, no harm is done to the house or the trees.

Bill Boyd, Lew Cody, James Gleason and Russel Gleason are depicted as four doughboys detailed by the major in charge of the retreating Americans to hold a French town against several regiments of Germans. Believe it or not, but they do it, with only a machine gun. These scenes are interlarded with weak flashbacks by which we are informed of the manner in which each of the four enlisted. This would have served to retard the story, if there had been one, but in this case it was a relief to rest one's ears.

This vehicle should have been thrown into the waste basket in the first place, but Director John Robertson can be held responsible for most of its faults as entertainment. Let's hope it is the war picture to end all war pictures. The players were put through their paces in a mechanical manner, with Zasu Pitts the most effective, though in a role that could have been dropped without any trouble. James Gleason garnered a number of laughs, as usual.

The Maltese Falcon

(Warner)

Good Mystery Yarn

Why this story was ever chosen as a starring vehicle for Bebe Daniels will puzzle many who see it because the screen version as well as the book are based upon the role played by Ricardo Cortez. At no time does it give the feminine character any chance to carry the story.

As a result Cortez walks away with the picture and his acting is for the most part very satisfactory. He has a tendency to use his broad smile too much and this detracts from the action, but it is not too noticeable.

Bebe Daniels does her best with a part that isn't all that it should be and, considering this handicap, her performance is very good.

The picture is based on a thrilling mystery story concerning the Maltese Falcon, a statuette which is reported to be worth many millions. Who has it and who is trying to get it form the basis for the story and provides many entertaining moments.

Cortez as the Don Juan detective who "loves 'em and leaves 'em," and whose main thought is the price he can get for any job, has a role which shows him as a thoroughly despicable character. At no time does he forget his love for the dollar.

The story is filled with plots and counterplots that arise suddenly and depart the same way. Not until the end does one suspect how it will turn out, and even then the final sequence is a distinct surprise. The murders committed in order that certain parties may acquire the Falcon add many of the thrills in the picture.

Others in the cast who add materially by fine performances are Una Merkel, Robert Elliott, Otto Matiesen, Thelma Todd, Dudley Digges and J. Farrell MacDonald. The direction of Roy Del Ruth is for the most part very good, but he is handicapped by having to give a woman the featured place in a story that is distinctly built around a male character.

Strong comedy shorts or musicals will go well here.

You and I

(Warner)

Comedy Puts It Over

The clever clowning of Una Merkel and Charles Butterworth saves Philip Barry's "You and I" from being a dry and uninteresting presentation of father and son love.

As it is the film version lacks spontaneity and the remainder of the cast reads its lines with ineffectual, although religious, effort.

The picture marks the return to the screen of Doris Kenyon. She knows a tendency to overact. Lewis Stone is cast in a role with little chance of distinguishing himself. He gives one of his usual smooth characterizations.

Butterworth is supplied with an abundance of clever lines which he gives forth in his peculiar style, to the intense delight of a preview audience. Una Merkel possesses real ability as a comedienne and evokes laughter as a slow-witted servant girl.

John Darrow and Evalyn Knapp have minor roles and are fairly convincing. The photographer treats Miss Knapp a bit too harshly.

The plot concerns a father, portrayed by Stone, who has made a success in business while longing to paint. His son, Darrow, has a talent for architecture, but wants to get into his father's firm so he can marry the girl with whom he is in love. The father gives up business to paint, loses his money and finally realizes that his efforts in art are not what he expected. The son tires of business and decides to study in Paris, carrying out the wishes of fond father.

Robert Milton's direction is very good and adds much to the story.

Three Girls Lost

(Fox)

Interesting, Well Acted

This is an interesting little drama that a good cast, handling all roles intelligently, has made better than ordinary screen fare. The story is the romantic, eventful kind that the average office girl finds highly diverting, and inasmuch as it was widely syndicated as a newspaper serial, it should not be a total stranger when it arrives in many of the larger cities.

Loretta Young, Joan Marsh and Joyce Compton are three girls who have tired of their small western town and seek Chicago careers and excitements. They meet aboard a large passenger plane en route from Minneapolis to Chicago and decide to live together in the city. They take rooms at a boarding house on the near north side of Chicago. Joan Marsh, who plays the role of a baby-faced gold-digger, meets John Wayne, a young architect, when she finds herself locked out of the house on her first night in the city. Wayne, also a boarder, admits her with his key.

In the morning, Wayne takes Joan to see a penthouse, which he has designed, under construction. She meets the owner of the place, a wealthy racketeer, played by Lew Cody. Cody obtains a position for her as a model. The other girls find work in stock yards offices.

At a party to celebrate the completion of Cody's penthouse apartment, Joan refuses to leave with Wayne and Loretta Young. They depart without her and Cody induces Joan to go for a drive with him. They are followed by another car, so Cody ejects Joan and she walks home alone. Later, Cody's body is found riddled with bullets in his car, Joan's handbag beside him.

When police come to the apartment to question her, Joan involves Wayne by describing an argument the two had had over escorting her home that night. Wayne is arrested. Loretta Young, secretly in love with Wayne, aids him while in prison, and, when Cody's murder has been traced to rival racketeers and Wayne is released, he renounces Joan and turns to Loretta.

The production is marked by capable handling of all roles and by Sidney Lanfield's competent direction. Action lags occasionally due to the inclusion of too much detail, but interest for the most part is well sustained. Dialogue is good throughout, and on several occasions is slightly too brilliant for the company it is intended to keep, but then it may not be too much to believe that even country girls in city offices are capable of extremely subtle wisecracks.

Use a cartoon and scenic or musical shorts with this.

Young As You Feel

Rogers Scores Again

America's freelance diplomat again rings the bell with another very laughable and delightful comedy that will serve as highly pleasing screen fare for the entire family. Rogers in a role that is not new to the screen, gives a performance that is top-notch in all respects.

Taken from the stage play, "Father and the Boys," the story serves as good screen material, although there is very little new about it. The ending is not at all ordinary and has a clever twist, but the yarn for the most part is standard stuff.

Rogers in the part of the father, who has religiously observed set rules for all his actions, finally decides to play the same high life game as his sons. He breaks his regular habits and becomes a "gay dog," bowing to each command of the vivacious Fifi Dorsay. The sons, seeing their father having a wild time and forgetting his business, decide they will have to put a stop to it all. They make valiant efforts to save him from blackmail.

Instead of blackmailing Rogers as expected, Dorsay is merely trying to show the old boy a good time and when all is ironed out no one suffers except a couple of grafting salesmen who sold one of the boys a chunk of granite for $20,000. Rogers gets back at him, however, by showing that the salesman is nted elsewhere on graft charges.

Frank Borzage's direction is very good throughout and he adds many deft touches to the picture. Rogers is of course the outstanding performer, but he is given some good assistance by Fifi Dorsay, Donald Dillaway, Brandon Hurst, Terrence Ray, Lucien Littlefield, Rosalie Rae and Lucille Browne.

The story, which was written by George Ade for the stage and adapted by Edwin Burke, is satisfactory.

Four Fussy Camels!

Hollywood (QP)—Four camels were being used in the filming of foreign versions of "Beau Ideal," Radio picture, in sand dunes on the California side of the Arizona-California border. The sand was warm and soft. The camels were led down the California state highway, smooth as glass, and all went well until the time came to turn into the sand. The lead camel halted, sat down and called it a day. He was pried to his feet. He was pushed into the sand. He touched it with a dainty foot and withdrew again. This went on for hours.

Finally, the crew gave up in disgust.

"Just a bunch of camels gone Hollywood," growled a "prop" man.

Daybreak

(M-G-M)

Sophisticated Drama

Ramon Novarro continues his career as a breaker of hearts in M-G-M's "Daybreak." Suave and sophisticated, a debonair spendthrift, and a dissolute officer of the emperor's guard, he uses a wide brush to paint Vienna, until he meets a singing teacher. From her he learns about many things, including love. His love for the singing teacher, his gambling with her paramour and his refusal to give her up to save his career result in his involuntary retirement from the guard and his purchase of transportation to Brooklyn for himself and the teacher, Helen Chandler.

Jacques Feyder has directed the product in a truly continental manner and one of its merits is fidelity. The backgrounds and the capable acting of the entire cast save it from possible banality and a feeling on the part of the audience that it is "just another one of those foreign pictures." Merritt B. Gerstad, the photographer, used his camera to the fullest advantage.

Jean Hersholt gives an outstanding portrayal of a man who believes that money will buy him love. He gets a woman, but not her soul. He wins at cards, and in the game he plays with Helen and Novarro, but loses in the end.

Miss Chandler's part gives her ample opportunity to display her ability and wistful charm. Novarro is as good as usual, but his interpretation of the character of an Austrian officer suffers from lack of originality.

C. Aubrey Smith is effective as the stern general who demands that the officers beneath him carry out the tradition of the guard by effacing themselves when unable to pay debts of honor. Karen Morley, as the girl whom Novarro might have married to save his career, reveals an inherent ability as an actress.

The picture is extremely broad in treatment.

The Minute Man

(Fox)

Pleasing Comedy

A light and amusing comedy along domestic lines is "The Minute Man," the latest release under the Fox banner in which Sidney Fox and El Brendel are featured and which is an adaptation of the stage play, "Six Cylinder Love," by William Anthony McGuire.

Thoroughly modern in every line, from the 16-cylinder car which proves the financial downfall of the newlyweds to the bootlegger who carries his samples on the corks in his pocket, the production is smart without being too sophisticated to appeal generally. The story deals with an exceptionally devoted young couple who fail to heed the warning of the neighbor from whom they purchase a high-powered car, thereby acquiring the former owner's leech-like friends, as well.

Edward Everett Horton is miscast in the role of the tempter who leads the wife on to financial extravagance and threatens the peace of the home, but Spencer Tracy is excellent as the husband, who, like the worm, turns when his wife's indiscretions lead him to theft and the door of the prison looms. But it is dainty Sidney Fox who "steals" the picture.

El Brendel appears only in the final scenes and his role is brief, but highly amusing. The character which he portrays gives an excellent "tip" to all good bootleggers in the matter of salesmanship. On the whole, "The Minute Man" is not to be taken seriously at any time, but may be recommended as a good blues cure.

Dude Ranch

(Paramount)

Hilarious

Frank Tuttle has pieced together one hour of hilarious whoopee in "Dude Ranch," his latest comedy satire from the Paramount lot. Tuttle's reputation for taking almost any kind of story and turning it into a paying film isn't strained with this latest effort. It should be an audience pleaser in any theatre.

Jack Oakie's name is featured at the top of the cast list, but he doesn't take all the glory in the picture by any stretch of the imagination.

Stuart Edwin, Mitzi Green, Eugene Pallette and Charles Sellon capture about as many laughs as the star and they earn all of them. There is little to choose between the work of any of the quintet, all of them giving top-notch performances.

June Collyer has little to do except wear gorgeous clothes, but she does that to everybody's satisfaction. It's a slight strain on the audience to see her fall for Oakie; she seems so much smarter than he does.

The story concerns a dude ranch operated by Erwin. It is a smart place where the guests ride on English saddles and wear evening clothes at night. The customers are ready to walk out from lack of excitement when Oakie, Pallette and Green, remnants of a touring stage company, appear on the scene.

They promise to furnish real excitement in return for their board and room. Using their stage costumes and a few props from their trunk, they startle the guests with a display of wild west melodrama which has everybody ducking for cover.

Oakie immediately becomes their hero after chasing the villain into the dark and ostensibly killing him, after which Pallette, being "dead" as a "villain," reappears as an "Indian."

Everything is moving smoothly until four gangsters arrive to rob a bank. One of them dresses like Oakie and suspicion is directed toward the hero.

Mitzi saves the dav as the bandits kidnap Miss Collyer. Tuttle keeps the slapstick alive to the end by staging a breath-taking chase after bandits down winding mountain roads.

The picture is well produced and the troupe of capable performers all do their roles in workmanlike fashion. Tuttle has timed the laughs well.

Musical and dramatic shorts will fit well here.

Threatened Vienna Amusement Taxes Would Affect Pictures

Vienna—Agitation in the Municipal Council threatens new taxes on the trade. An increased tax is under consideration. This will seriously affect small and medium-sized houses.

The Vienna C. E. A. will request the government to oppose the increases.

Efforts are being made to arrive at a legally defined scale after the Paris method, instead of present increases or decreases of taxes in accordance with requirements. Since January 1, the tax in Vienna is on the basis of 28 1-3%. It was hoped to reduce this to 20% as a maximum, but the new arrangement rendered these prospects uncertain.

Glenn Tryon stages something of a comeback in this fast comedy. Creative Energy Saved by Talker, Kelly Points Out

Hollywood (QP)—Talking pictures give a working playwright a place to use the 40 to 50 per cent of creative energy that now is wasted because of the limitations of the legitimate theatre, says George Kelly, stage dramatist, who is taking his initial whirl at writing for the talkers at the M-G-M studios. Kelly is author of such moneymakers of the stage as "The Torchbearers," "The Show-Off," "Behold the Bridegroom" and "Phillip Goes Forth."

Explaining his theory, Kelly said:

"For example, before I evolved the final idea which is 'The Show-Off' in its final form for the legitimate theatre, I have had to abandon perhaps a dozen other ideas or angles. I liked these ideas and angles but they were not suited to the stage. There are three types of stories which cannot be effectively visualized in terms of play technique. These are, first, a story of many and diverse characters; second, a story of many and adverse settings; third, the complete and detailed study of a human life.

"The great elasticity of the screen, on the other hand, makes it ideal for these very items the stage has been forced to reject.

"The stage production of a drama loses interest in direct proportion to the manner in which it is cut up into scenes. Playgoers who may stand having a curtain dropped, interrupting their thoughts, four times in an evening, become definitely annoyed when there are sixteen such halts in a single show. The stage, therefore, is best at vignettes, snapshots of human life. It labors decidedly if called upon to take a more panoramic view.

"The talking screen has increased the pace of thinking of stage technicians, and the stage has taken on a new strength and individuality which means everything for its future. The work being done by the little theatre and amateur movements has increased tremendously in importance since the coming of the talkie has its effect on road companies. The stage and the talking picture are distinct, separate and parallel arts. I foresee most definitely a time when you can attend, on separate nights, a stage play and a talking picture based on the same idea, and be able to enjoy each one for entirely different reasons."

Crime, Sex and Films

Hollywood (QP)—Statistics to smash any impressions that the studios are devoting their efforts to crime and sex pictures, were offered here by Dr. Clinton Wunder, executive manager of the Academy, in an address before the Women's City Club on "The Eighth Art." Of 607 pictures reviewed by leading social welfare organizations between last July and January, he said, 86 per cent were endorsed by at least one group.

In January and February, Wunder disclosed, 48 pictures were released by members of the AMPPDA, and only nine in any way involved sex or crime prominently.

Duty Lopped When He Says Apparatus Will Aid Jobless

Sydney, Australia—Camera and recording equipment costing $125,000 in America, which was brought here by a new local producing company, Efftee Productions, has been allowed into the country almost duty free, although its dutiable value is assessed at $40,000. The privilege was allowed by the federal government following overtures by Frank Thring, head of Efftee, who presented arguments that as he was establishing a new Australian industry and would therefore be creating considerable employment, it was up to the government to extend him assistance.

Thring's local production project is the largest and most important ever attempted here, and intense interest is being taken in its outcome. The stumbling blocks to Australian production in the past have been represented in the difficulty of securing outside releasing affiliations, and in the amount of capital available. Thring is extremely wealthy. The first picture will be an all-talking feature surrounding the typical Australian digger as the war saw him, enacted by an entire domestic cast.

Only Two Features Being Produced in Tint

Expect Increasing Application of Process to Comedies to Keep Interest Alive

Hollywood (QP)—A survey of the use of color in the motion picture industry reveals that while only two feature length pictures are being made in tint, several companies are utilizing the development in the short field. Indications are that the main reason for this is that producers are willing to continue to experiment to keep interest alive and to aid in the development of the processes and the cheapening of costs.

It is further indicated that there will be an increasing use of color in the short field, and that as perfection is reached, it will be used in feature pictures exclusively. Results in shorts have been highly satisfactory to date.

Lend Life to Programs

Exhibitors are said to favor the color shorts because they lend life to their programs and add to practically all short subjects as far as audiences are concerned.

With color at its present development, the main objection to its general use on the part of producers seems to be the high cost. Business depression is said to be responsible for the present lull in the color business as far as feature length product is concerned.

Just at present, Radio is making "The No Girl," a special, in technicolor. Paramount plans the use of color in "Rose of the Rancho," also utilizing technicolor.

Sennet's Own Tint Process

After taking a set-back with the "King of Jazz"—a set-back not due to the use of color—Universal is confining its use to the short feature field. At present "Strange As It Seems" is being made in Multicolor.

Mack Sennett has developed his own color process, which has shown to advantage in "Speed," "Take Your Medicine" and "Strange Birds," with a constant improvement noted in each release.

Welshay Productions, headed by Frank Shay and Robert Welsh, is using Technicolor for a novel series entitled "Beauty Secrets of Hollywood." The color, in this instance, with a special adaptation to the subject, is reported to be virtually making the series.

M-G-M at present has six Technicolor shorts which it expects to release at an early date. These include "The Devil's Cabaret," "Pirates," "The General" and "Clock Shock."

United Artists Plans Houses

San Francisco—United Artists has announced plans for three new houses here, and sites acquired in Berkeley, Richmond and Oakland.

Will It Ever End?

Even back in the days of horse-cars, anti-film interests, ranted over the question of suitability of films for children, as evidenced by the following which appeared in the New York Tribune, 20 years ago this week:

"Motion picture shows aren't doing as much harm as many persons suppose," said Raymond B. Fosdick, Commissioner of Accounts, before the Woman's Municipal League yesterday. 'Our children aren't being ruined, in spite of what some say,' he said, 'but there is no question that if the law were enforced and minors excluded 75 per cent of the moving picture shows would have to shut up shop.' "

Warner to Release 15 This Spring to Enjoy Business Rise

To take advantage of the upward trend which he now observes in business conditions, is the reason given by Sam E. Morris, vice president and general manager of Warner Brothers for the spring release of 15 Warner and First National features.

"Our action in releasing so many of our features at this time," he said, "is according to a carefully worked out plan made months ago. We decided to put into work a number of pictures so as to have them ready when the upward business trend, now showing itself, began to be felt."

The Warner releases are "The Millionaire," "God's Gift to Women," "The Public Enemy," "Svengali," "The Four Flusher," "The Maltese Falcon," "Night Nurse" and "Gold Dust Gertie."

The First National releases are "The Finger Points," "Big Business Girl," "Chances," "Men of the Sky," "Party Husband," "The Reckless Hour" and "Broad Minded."

Industry Aids Nation in Its Depression Era

Washington (QP)—The industry is doing all possible to accelerate the return of normal industrial conditions, it was disclosed this week in a letter from Will Hays to Col. Arthur Woods, chairman of the President's emergency committee for employment, made public this week by the latter.

Outlining the ways in which the various branches of the industry have endeavored to maintain conditions on an even keel, Hays assured Col. Woods that these efforts would not be relaxed and promised the fullest co-operation of the industry in any program which would make for better times.

"The industry," says Hays, "is mobilized for vigorous co-operation in the national emergency program. Employment conditions within our group are nearly as stable as in normal times. One of the important producers told his employes: 'If you do your work, you will keep your job. Put your mind at ease on this subject and do your bit to bring back prosperity by continuing your normal expenditures.'

300,000 Employed in Pictures

"Other firms have taken similar action. Throughout our entire range of activities, employment and wage levels have been held at a high level. Our industry employs approximately 300,000 persons. The total number has tended to increase slightly in late years, despite the depression, partly due to the opening of new theatres and partly to the new types of personnel made necessary by sound pictures and other technical advances.

"In addition to direct action taken within the industry, leading factors in the industry sought to contribute to the return of prosperity by placing orders for materials which would affect other groups. One producing organization, with theatres in all parts of the United States, took steps to rush the completion of 10 new houses on a circuit, effecting within a few months a payroll increase of approximately $2,500,000. In each case, the opening of new theatres involved a rental of new stores adjacent to the properties, which in turn provided new employment and stimulated business in the cities affected. In this development, the company not only helped create local prosperity, but benefited by the existing low material prices and favorable labor market.

"A leading factor in the raw film industry has protected many thousands of workers through its employment stabilization plan. Late in 1930, this company employed 600 additional employes as a measure of confidence in business upturn.

Newsreels Have Helped

"The screen itself has done direct service in the war against unemployment. Feeling that the psychological effect of depression is an important factor in retarding business recovery, the newsreel companies, with outlets in 20,000 theatres throughout the country, have taken pains to present scenes which show a bona fide improvement in conditions. Such events as the reopening of factories or the start of construction jobs have been widely featured.

"Theatres in communities all over the country have done tangible service by meeting the demand for benefit performances. Probably no other single group has been instrumental in raising more funds for the relief of needy cases arising from drought and employment. Film exchanges furnished hundreds of films for such performances, as a contribution from the producers.

"In these ways, industry has tried to do its part in meeting the national emergency. It is the intent of our group to continue along these lines with the hope of contributing toward an accelerated recovery of business as conditions improve."

Move Mike for German—Voila! He's a Spaniard

Hollywood (QP)—"Do you know the difference between the 'German position,' the 'French position,' the 'English position,' the 'Spanish position'?"

Sounds like a quiz on current politics, doesn't it?

This question, however, is one which has become very common in Hollywood, and it has absolutely no connection with international affairs.

It is a query addressed to every apprentice in every film studio sound department, before he is promoted to the job of mixer. (The mixer, or monitor, is in charge of sound recording for the company to which he is attached.)

"We have discovered by long practice," stated Douglas Shearer, chief recording engineer at M-G-M, "that microphones must be placed at different distances and directions from the mouth of the speaker, for each language he speaks.

"For instance, with a man like Adolphe Menjou, who makes pictures in four different languages, English, French, German and Spanish, the position of the microphone would be radically different for each language.

"The reason for this is the different manner in which the different nationalities pronounce their words, the nature of the words themselves, and the manner in which the person expels his breath in talking.

"German, for example, has a large number of deep, guttural sounds which do not come in well on the 'English postion.' Move the microphone a few inches, however, and we get perfect German.

"Spanish, to take another example, abounds in words that are spelled alike but mean different things when pronounced differently. Examples are the pronoun "this"—"este"; and the verb, "You are"—"esta." To get absolutely perfect differentiation on this delicate point of pronunciation, we again change the mike to still another position."

Why 1715 Changed to Western Electric

Listed below are the reasons given by a large and representative group of exhibitors for changing from their initial sound equipment to Western Electric.

42% made the change because poor reproduction of the first equipment drove away business.

29% made the change because investigation convinced them that Erpi service and continuous dependable performance would make W. E. the most economical.

26% made the change because a survey of all equipments convinced them that W. E. was the best.

3% made the change because the Western Electric name, they felt, had definite box office drawing power.

Some exhibitor comments after making the change: "Tripled receipts"..."Profits 30% higher"..."Like an aspirin for a headache after bootleg equipment"..."No trouble with W. E. equipment"..."Know we have the best"..."Stands up well under use."

Says U. S. Films Slip in Balkans

San Antonio, Tex.—Louis Santikos, veteran theatre operator, who has represented Columbia and Tiffany in Athens, Greece, for the past two years, states that though American films were far ahead of the foreigns in silent days, the reverse is decidedly true since the advent of the talking film.

French pictures lead, because more than 70% of the Balkan population speak French; German comes next with 20%, and American films third with 10. Santikos suggests the only method of improving the status of American films is the introduction of sufficient subtitles in the native language to make the film intelligible to the Balkan audiences.

$2,600,000 Loss By Pathe in 1930

figures, would give the Class "A" preference stockholders $14.38 a share. This stock is now selling on the exchange at between $5 and $6 a share. That value per share, however, would be dependent upon a liquidation of assets at balance sheet figures without further interest or liquidating charges, and also upon a $4,000,000 valuation for the company's interest in the DuPont Company.

Calculation of the value of $14.38 is further based upon an assumption that the 948,581 shares of no par value common stock would receive nothing in ultimate liquidation. The consent of the common stockholders would be necessary legally to authorize the sale of the company's interest in the DuPont Company, and it is not considered probable that holders of the common stock would agree to that without some compromise which would give that class of stock some dividend upon liquidation.

Two big items in the balance sheet are inventories of $2,186,728, a large share of which value was sold to Radio-Keith-Orpheum, an item of $2,486,073, representing the notes receivable from Radio-Keith-Orpheum, and the $4,000,000 valuation of the DuPont shares.

The balance sheet indicates the company has set aside $143,000 worth of its own bonds at par, reducing the outstanding bonds to $4,993,000. Bonds, however, are retirable at a bonus of five points. The report also indicates that the company has acquired 8,630 shares of its own Class "A" preference stock, and 3,245 shares of its common stock.

The profit and loss statement for the year shows a loss for the 52 weeks carried to a surplus of $2,007,771, which compares after adjustments with approximately $500,000 in the year of 1930. Indication of the decline in the company's business, which preceded the sale of its assets to Radio-Keith-Orpheum, is evidenced by a comparison of gross sales in 1930 of $14,581,000, against gross sales in 1929 of $18,168,000. The cost of sales was reduced in 1930 to $15,601,000, from a cost in 1929 of $17,591,000.

In the report to stockholders, signed by Joseph P. Kennedy, the valuation of the DuPont-Pathe shares at $4,000,000 is justified as conservative by a statement that dividends are being received by Pathe Exchange, Inc., from its equity at the rate of $196,000 a year, also stating that the current dividend rate being paid by DuPont represents a disbursement equivalent to less than 40% of the earnings per share in 1930.

The report points out that in connection with the sale to Radio-Keith-Orpheum of the right to use the name "Pathe" in the motion picture field. The name of Pathe Films, Inc., which was organized to conduct the non-theatrical business of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been changed to Pathegrams, Inc., and that this company continues in operation.

Government Okays Loew Sale By Fox

November, 1928, was brought on the ground that purchase of Loew stock violated the Clayton Act, the action asking that the acquisition be adjudged illegal and the defendants—Fox Film and Fox Theatres—be compelled to divest themselves of it.

When the refinancing for the Fox companies was developed, it is generally believed that the creation of Film Securities and the plan to transfer the Loew stock to it was arranged with the impending government suit in mind.

Contrary to previous reports, a $20,000,000 two-year 6% note offering will be made by Film Securities to the public, when the general market takes a more favorable turn. It was first expected that this sum would be indefinitely held privately by the banking interests in Film Securities, including Chase Securities, Dillon, Read, Bancamerica-Blair, Harris, Forbes & Co., Central-Illinois, Chatham-Phoenix and Hayden, Stone.

Annual Meeting Postponed

The annual Fox stockholders' meeting, after a short session Wednesday was adjourned until May 1st. Election of directors was deferred until then. Clarke, at the close of the meeting, stated that "the annual report of Fox has been delayed because until this week three firms of accountants have been auditing the company's books for the purposes of recent financing, thereby making it impossible to complete the report.

"Stockholders will have observed," Clarke continued, "that in connection with the new financing a statement of earnings for the 52 weeks ended September 27, 1930 was made and that it was at variance with interim reports previously issued by the company. This is due to the fact that the public accountants whose figures have been published, adopted an amortization table for sound pictures which differs drastically from that heretofore accepted by the company upon the recommendation of other public accountants at the beginning of the year 1930 and continued by the present management. The management believes that the adjustment, which accounts in large measure for the variation between interim figures and the figures published in connection with recent financing, is excessive and misleading.

Used Different Amortization Rate

"The dividends received by the company from its ownership of varying interests in theatre companies (except those owned 85% or more) were not included in the statement. It has been the company's practice to include these funds in its earnings and the company will continue to do so.

"The amortization table on which these published figures were based provides for charging off 93½% of the cost of a sound film in 26 weeks. Experience shows that this rate of amortization far exceeds depletion of the earning capacity of productions.

"The published figures referred to eliminated all dividend income from the common stock of Loew's, Inc., heretofore owned by Fox Film Corp. and they did not include any income from the 462,000 shares of class A stock of Film Securities Corp. received in part payment for the Loew's stock.

"Gross income including film rentals and receipts from theatres owned by Fox increased about 23% last year. It is particularly significant that in a year of world-wide business depression our domestic film rentals increased nearly 11% and foreign rentals nearly 55% aggregate gain in rentals alone were approximately $4,000,000.

"Unfaithful," "Dishonored" Seattle Bets

SEATTLE—New policy of eight acts at the Orpheum resulted in big business running the take up to $15,000 in a house which usually does but $12,500. "Unfaithful" and "Dishonored" also were above normal but the latter wasn't strong enough for the second week contemplated for it. "Reaching for the Moon" was big and is continuing so. "Honor Among Lovers" was not exploited and business was disappointing. "The Widow from Chicago" brought the best business in several weeks to the Fox. Norma's Kiss Means 33 G's In Baltimore

BALTIMORE—With Easter Monday proving a bonanza and all the week clear and balmy spring weather excepting late Monday and heavy rain Tuesday, business at the First run theaters for this week was tremendous. Loew's Century and Stanley theatres ran neck and neck for first place and the great grosses.

The Stanley won out by a few thousand, doing $33,500, a record breaker for this house, whereas the average is usually around $17,500. Norma Shearer proved the winner in "Strangers May Kiss," aided by a large portion of national advertising in the newspapers. But Norma's fans came out in droves and after seeing her in this big B.O. attraction, they told other droves, and the crowding was just like rush hour on the subway.

Then at Loew's Century, one of the greatest combinations was offered with William Haines, a prime favorite here, in "A Tailor Made Man," with the Loew-Capitol stage unit Ted Lewis in person and other droves flocked there to jam every inch of available space from opening to closing. Gross at this house figured at $30,000, whereas usually it is about $19,000.

"A Connecticut Yankee" was up several points at the Metropolitan. "Kiki" moved from the State to the Orpheum for another big week for Boston.

All told, patrons received more for their money than for many months past. Publix started a triple day and date showing of "Dishonored," adding the Fenway to the Olympia and Uptown, with good success, even though the Fenway and Uptown are not far removed.
